passed the newspaper boat she put out these lights. At a mile away it was difficult to see either the crew in their dark clothing or the vessel, painted to match the color of the water.

As the Cape Henry lightship and the Virginia and Maryland pilot boats came into the view of the Deutschland and her convoy they began to exchange blinker signals rapidly, the submarine's white light in the top of her periscope showing for the first time. When they were within two miles of the Cape Henry lighthouse the submarine had moved over well toward the shore and her outlines seldom could be seen.

Decreasing her speed, the Deutschland hugged the shore line as closely as was possible, while the Timmins passed out of the capes a short distance to determine whether the allied warships were there to block the submarine's progress. In less than fifteen minutes, or shortly before 9 o'clock, she signaled the Deutschland that she had a clear path and the undersea freighter quickly hastened down the channel and to sea.

Then the Dive Under On her way the submarine signaled briefly to the Timmins with her periscope light. The signaling completed, the light disappeared, and with it the Deutschland.

Instead of going to Baltimore, toward which she headed after leaving the Deutschland, the Timmins came in here. "Well, she's off and well on her way back to the old country," said Captain Hinch.

"Just as she started out to sea," he said, "Captain Koenig and the crew of the Deutschland came on deck and gave three rousing cheers for 'America and the American people.' The sea was rough and the spray was slashing high, but the hearty cheers of the men of the Deutschland rang clearly over the waves. Captain Koenig yelled something to me in farewell, but the submarine was pulling out rapidly and the distance between us was too great for me to hear what he said.

Bremen Coming Soon "For about a mile the Deutschland ploughed boldly through the billow of the Atlantic. When about a mile outside the capes we could see her lights slowly disappearing as she submerged." The captain declared the submarine again will go through the English channel.

"There is no chance that the British cruisers will find the Deutschland," he said. Confidence was expressed by the captain that the Bremen would soon make an American port. Captain Hinch said that one United States destroyer was the only warship sighted by the Deutschland before she submerged.

At Cape Henry to-day one two-funnel warship was visible, lying out beyond the three-mile limit.
