Police Commissioner Woods assigned a policeman to every car of these lines and except for a few minor demonstrations there was no disorder. Officers of the two companies asserted that fewer than 500 men had struck.

The cars were late in getting away from the barns, which led to the belief early in the day that a serious tie-up had been effected.

Reports received by Police Inspector Max Schmidtberger during the early forenoon showed that 598 of the 1,291 cars operated normally by the New York Railways Company were in service, that the Third avenue line in the Bronx was operating 109 cars out of 252, but that in Manhattan only 73 out of 505. In Queens, the reports said, 83 cars out of 171 were in operation.

About fifty cases of intimidation were reported to police headquarters, including a demonstration at one of the New York Railways car barns, which called police reserves there. The threatening attitude of the strikers and their sympathizers frightened a number of loyal men into returning their cars to the barns.
