MARKET MAKES

cember, 1914.

Transactions in the first hour, with many representative issues altogether omitted, barely totaled 20,000 shares, and the last hour was equally apathetic. Attendance of traders was at a minimum and commission houses might as well have suspended operations. Changes in quoted values were almost utterly devoid of actual importance. News of the day, aside from the car strike situation, had little bearing upon market conditions. Local tractions moved variably, Third Avenue rising 1%, while Brooklyn Transt lost a point. The closing was firm. Bonds were irregular.
