

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

A GIRL AND A MAN

A New and Vital Romance of City Life by Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XV

(Copyright, 1916, Star Co.)

Mr. Bainbridge had been right, for Agnes Morley had finished the three long letters he had dictated and had sent them back to him before William Hale returned to his office.

"Any telephone calls?" her employer queried.

"No, sir," she replied. "No calls of any kind."

"Are you ready for work now?" he asked, glancing over the mail that had accumulated on his desk since noon.

"Yes, sir."

He began dictation at once. When he had finished his letters he asked his secretary to rush them through as soon as she could, as there were several business documents he wanted copied carefully.

The documents to which her employer had referred were very long, and, as they were technical in character, required care and application. It was almost 5 o'clock when they were finished.

"I'm afraid I have been rather slow about these," she apologized as she laid them before Mr. Hale.

"They are not easy to copy," he remarked briefly. "But," glancing at them, "they seem well enough done. Send word to Mr. Bainbridge to come in here before he goes home. I want to go over these papers with him."

Opening the door, she looked about for Joe. He was sitting in his usual place near the outer entrance, and came quickly forward at sight of her beckoning finger.

She drew the office door shut behind her before delivering her message. One never knew what audible comment the lad might make to any order from one of the stenographers.

A Message For Joe "Joe," she said, "Mr. Hale wishes you to tell Mr. Bainbridge that he would like him to come into his office before he goes home."

"All right," Joe grinned gleefully. "I say, your game of bluff didn't work with old Bainbridge, did it? He made you take his dictation after all, didn't he?"

"Yes," the girl replied gravely. "He did. And he was right. I had no business to try to shirk any work that came my way. I am paid for my services, and they belong to the firm."

Joe eyed her in astonishment. "Well, I'll be darned!" he exclaimed softly.

She only smiled and went back into the office.

A moment later Mr. Bainbridge entered. He did not look toward the girl seated on the other side of the room but drew a chair up beside Mr. Hale and the two men bent over the documents just copied.

To occupy the time Agnes cleaned the type of her machine and oiled all the bearings thoroughly, then wiped off every part. After that she stowed away in the drawers of her desk the pads, note books and pencils, first seeing that these last were sharpened and ready for tomorrow's work. As she put the top on her typewriter she heard her employer speak.

"What's this?" he asked. Then—"Oh, yes, I see—it's something that Miss Morley has been doing. Miss Morley!"—without lifting his head—

"Here's a sheet that you must have picked up inadvertently with the papers you copied."

He held the paper out toward her but did not look at her. Evidently in his estimation the matter was not worth a second thought, and he handed her the page as he might have dropped it into the waste basket at his feet, but she felt the blood rush to her cheeks.

It was the paper on which she had been pretending to work so seriously when Bainbridge had asked her to "help him out of a tight place."

An Amused Expression Against her will she glanced in his direction, and met his eyes squarely. There was a shrewd yet amused expression in them that made her blush a moment later.

"I beg your pardon!" she murmured to Mr. Hale as she took the typewritten page from his hand, and tearing rapidly into bits, dropped them into the basket by her machine.

"It is five o'clock—you may go now," her employer informed her a moment later.

He had finished his inspection of the matter before him and rose to his feet.

"If I suppose you're through for the day too—aren't you, Bainbridge?" he asked his partner.

"Almost, but not quite," the other man returned. "Miss Durkee was ill this afternoon and had to go home, and that delayed me somewhat. And that reminds me, Hale," he continued, "I took the liberty of asking Miss Morley to take down two or three rather important letters for me while you were out. I thought you would not mind."

"Mind! Of course not!" Mr. Hale exclaimed. "That is, of course, unless it interfered with her lunch hour."

"Oh, no," Bainbridge returned, "she had come back from lunch. But she, very properly, hesitated, lest you might not approve, or for fear it might interfere with some work she had on hand."

"It interfered with no work of mine," Mr. Hale rejoined firmly. "And, Miss Morley," as the girl started from the room, "please remember that when I am absent and Mr. Bainbridge needs your services he is quite right to send for you. Understand?"

"Yes, sir," she replied faintly. "I understand."

Yet, as she left the building that afternoon she wondered if she really did understand anything except that she had acted like a fool.

GRACEFUL SKIRT WITH SHIRRINGS

Bind the Scalloped Flounces With a Different Material if You Desire

By MAY MANTON

9133 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Gathered Skirt, 24 to 30 waist.

This is really a very charming, graceful and attractive skirt and an exceptionally becoming one, for while it gives the fashionable flounced effect and breadth, it also gives long lines at the front and at the back. It may be shirred to form a girde or it may be cut off and joined to a belt. In whichever way it is treated, it makes an exceedingly good effect. The frill at the upper edge is a new finish and a pretty finish when the skirt is to be adjusted over the blouse. For wear with a girde, the skirt with the belt is of course to be preferred. The flounces may be made with scalloped or with straight edges.

For the medium size will be needed, 8 1/2 yards of material 27 inches wide, 6 1/2 yards 36 or 5 1/4 yards 44. The width at the lower edge is 4 yards.

The pattern No. 9133 is cut in sizes from 24 to 30 inches waist measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

MAN OF 80 BEST DANCER

Young Men Unable to Wrest County Championship From Him

Oak Orchard, Del., Aug. 15.—John Tom Rogers, more than eighty years old, once more showed the young men of Sussex county what it really means to dance, when he easily wrested the dancing championship for Sussex county from all who attempted to either show him new steps or tire him out in the annual contest held every year at Oak Orchard, on the Indian Bay, for years.

Rogers has held the championship, and, although he has raised sons who have tried to wrest the honors from him, he is still the master of them all.

THEATRICAL PLANS FOR THE SEASON

Wilmer and Vincent Announce Bookings and Policy of Their Playhouses

Wilmer & Vincent, who, since the recent withdrawal of Nathan Appell, are in sole possession of three of Harrisburg's theaters—the Orpheum, Majestic and Colonial—to-day announced their plans for the forthcoming season.

The Majestic Theater will reopen with Keith vaudeville next Monday. There will be three shows a day, the same as last season, and the booking department of Wilmer & Vincent has been busy for some time lining up the acts. C. Floyd Hopkins, who remains in Harrisburg as the Wilmer & Vincent representative for the coming season, said to-day that he will soon be ready to announce a handsome list of headliners for the early Fall at the Majestic. He hopes to start the season off with a bang, and keep it going at good speed.

The Orpheum, which last season returned to its original policy of road attractions, will continue with them. The prospects are according to the Wilmer & Vincent announcements that the coming season will see more big attractions at the Orpheum than Harrisburg has known in any one season for some years. Basing its conclusions on last season's success, Wilmer & Vincent feel that the big show is coming into its own again, and the firm is losing no opportunity to list for Harrisburg all of the first class offerings that present themselves for road bookings.

While there will be a burlesque show at the Orpheum on Thursday of this week, the regular Orpheum season will open on Saturday, August 26, with a new musical comedy, "My Home Town Girl," in which Hyams and McIntyre are featured. Kate Elinore will be on Saturday, and the new Gus Hill musical comedy, "My Aunt From Utah." On September 5, Al. H. Wilson will appear in an Irish romance, with music, "My Killarney Rose." Others of the better grade of attractions listed so far include: "Katinka," the widely heralded Hammerstein musical comedy; "Fair and Varmer," which is now playing at the Fulton Theater, New York; "Watch Your Step," the big Winter-garden review; "Common Clay," one of New York's biggest dramatic successes of the past season; "Lady Luxur"; "Hit the Trail Holiday," the George Cohan comedy "The House of Glass"; "The Merry Wives of Windsor"; "The Million Dollar Doll"; Al. G. Field; "Very Good, Eddie"; David Warfield; Mrs. Fiske in a return engagement in "Erstwhile Susan" and Mitzl Hajos in the sensational musical comedy hit "Fom Fom." How's pictures are dated for early in October. The American wheel burlesque attractions will be presented each Thursday.

Under the management of Gayle Burlingame, who has arranged to play his attractions at the Orpheum a number of musical celebrities are scheduled for local appearances. They include Mary Garden, Fritz Kreisler, Godowski, Ysaye, Emmy Destinn, Madame Gadsaki and Margaret Woodrow Wilson, daughter of the President. Burlesque will give a series of travesties in the early Fall. The policy at the Colonial will remain unchanged. Moving pictures will continue during the season.

Bethlehems Grow Steadily With Great Steel Plant

South Bethlehem, Pa., Aug. 15.—Wonderful strides are being made by the Bethlehem Steel Company in enlarging its plant here. Extensions are being made at the rate of $1,000,000 a month, and the consequent enlarging of the working force, which has now reached nearly 30,000 men, practically double the working force two years ago, has given a great impetus to the building trade in the Bethlehems, the contiguous boroughs of Northampton Heights and Fountain Hill, and the nearby towns of Diller, Hellertown, Freemansburg and Northampton Heights. To-day it is estimated that several million dollars are being spent in erecting new homes and business buildings, and even then the demand for workmen is growing faster than it is possible to supply. Real estate men say if they had 2,000 new homes in the Bethlehems they could fill them in a week or two. Outside business capital is beginning to see a wonderful opportunity in the Bethlehems, and before long there is expected to be a great influx of foreign capital.

Tom Taggart Not Backward in Telling Senate Failings

Washington, Aug. 14.—Tom Taggart, practical businessman and politician, told the Senate after a membership of but a few weeks just what he thought of it. Though giving it full credit for passage of legislation favored by President Wilson, he rapped its failure to attain business economy, uncracked its rivers and harbors and public buildings, its "leaky" measures and declared for a budget system of national appropriations. Old-time Senators stared at the resumption of a newcomer tearing strenuously into fixed Congressional habits. Many of them left their seats. But none interrupted. Instead of squandering money in catching cattle ticks, killing coyotes, poisoning ground squirrels, doctoring wild ducks, treating goats suffering from Malta fever, sending out onion seeds to folks who want a Government den and petunia seeds to folks who want carrots and turnips, let's get down to bed rock economy," said Taggart.

Or if Congress has a fixed and determined purpose to increase appropriations, wouldn't it be better to apply this money to helping farmers get intensive agriculture, training or city boys to learn good mechanical trades? Senator Taggart read a list of towns where public building appropriations authorized in a bill now pending averaged from $12.12 to $14.53 for each inhabitant. He said $20,000,000 too much was appropriated this year for rivers and harbors. He declared for these things, among others: Tariff commission; restructure tariff, United States aid to State roads, merchant marine, developing South American trade, flood control on the inland rivers, preparedness, Government nitrate plant and a bond issue to help pay for preparedness. ANOTHER $3 ADDED TO THE FUND FOR SOLDIERS' RELIEF Another $3 contribution was received to-day by the Telegraph for the Soldiers' Relief Fund. The contributor declined to permit her name to be printed. She asked that it be acknowledged thus: $3.00

Capt. Koenig's Wife Is Loyal to Great Britain London, Aug. 15.—The Daily Mail says that Captain Koenig, of the Deutschland, was married some fifteen years ago in Winchester to an English woman, who now resides in a London suburb. She was staying in Bremerhaven when the war broke out. Although practically the only English woman in an important German naval port, Mrs. Koenig is unwavering in her patriotism. She said yesterday: "Although I might technically be a German by marriage I am English through and through, and when I said to my husband, 'You do not expect me to take sides against my own country,' he replied, 'No, every one must stand by his own country in these times. You would not be worth your salt if you didn't, and I should not be worth my salt if I did not stand by mine.' On that we parted, and I have not seen him since." After a great deal of difficulty Mrs. Koenig was allowed to return to England. "I have not heard directly from my husband from that day to this," she continued, "although once or twice I heard indirectly that he was well. I am sure he had never been in a submarine before. I expect he was selected for this command because of his extensive acquaintance with American ports and Americans."

Why engine trouble? Frankly, there may be seventeen factors contributing at one time or another to "engine trouble." But it's always a safe bet that the greatest offender in the whole militaristic mob is Poor Lubrication. There's one sure way to banish lubrication-troubles: Atlantic Motor Oils. Here are oils that have done as much toward banishing engine-trouble via better lubrication as Atlantic Gasoline—the accepted standard—has toward increasing power, mileage and general car-happiness. Atlantic Polarine is commander of the crew of four principal motor oils, being the correct lubricant for 8 out of 10 cars. In all alternative cases, Atlantic "Light," Atlantic "Medium," or Atlantic "Heavy" is the one to use. Ask your garageman which. In actual tests, it has been definitely demonstrated that a properly lubricated motor will yield as much as five additional miles to the gallon of gasoline. Use the combination: Atlantic Gasoline for fuel, Atlantic Motor Oils for lubrication. The oldest and largest manufacturers of lubricating oils in the world recommend this combination to you without reservation. They ought to know whereof they speak—and they do. Read up on this subject. We have published a handsome and comprehensive book about lubrication. It is free. Ask your garage for it. If they cannot supply you, drop us a postal and the book will be sent you without charge.
