to the brotherhoods, and the outlook is variously described by those in touch with the negotiations.

Some of the railway executives say their proposition is positively their last; some of the men's leaders stand firmly against arbitration. Others on both sides have hopes that out of it will come further negotiation delaying a strike and possibly averting it.

Regards Situation as Serious
A statement issued by the Federal Board of Mediation to-day on the settlements it had conducted was regarded as significant. It described a report about to be made to the Senate which will disclose that in every case of settlements conducted under the old Erdman act or the later Newlands law substantial advantages have been won by the employes through arbitration. The only instance recorded where the men did not benefit was a settlement made without the participation of the Federal mediators.

President Wilson regards the situation as serious, but has not given up hope of a settlement. He will continue to use every effort to bring both sides together.

up hope of a settlement tinue to use every effort to bring both sides together.

Secretary Lane, formerly a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, has kept in close touch with the negotiations and conferred to-day with the President.

No word in regard to the situation having arrived, the employes' meeting adjourned shortly after noon until 2 o'clock. Meanwhile the presidents of the four brotherhoods remained at their hotel awaiting a summons from the White House. They were without official knowledge of the railroad heads' position.

In addition to placing several of these mammoth weapons along the coast line for mobile defense against naval attack, army officials now are considering the creation of a special regiment, equipped with six of the howitzers, to work as a unit of the mobile army. The problem confronting the designers is that regarding means of distributing the enormous weight of the gun and carriage in such a way that it can be moved over any good road.

weight of the same weight of the same a way that it can be moved over any good road.

Too Heavy For Roads
That difficulty is a determining factor in American heavy artillery designs. About a few of the largest city well-ballasted roads which would support the weight of the huge guns can be found, but even such a highway as the Boston Post road from Boston to New York, it is said, has many sections so lightly built that the great weight would crush through.

For those reasons it is planned to build the new howitzers primarily for transportation by rail on special cars. The regiment would not be attached to any army corps, as in the case with light artillery, and would be directly under the orders of the General Staff, to be sent to a point—where it was necessary to blast a lway through an enemy's field works. It is believed, however, that the weight can be so distributed on several carriages drawn by motor tractors that they could be hauled over a fairly well-balanced road.
