

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

"THEIR MARRIED LIFE"

Copyright by International News Service

"Mother writes that Winifred is just fine, dear," said Helen delightedly, after they were settled in the living room after dinner.

She scanned greedily every bit of news she could get about Winifred! Somehow it seemed harder than ever to spare the child this summer.

Warren looked up and smiled. To tell the truth he had not heard a thing Helen had said, but it was pleasant enough to have her ramble on in a monotone, that is when it didn't happen to annoy him.

Ten minutes elapsed and Helen raised her head to consult the clock—8.25. She hardly thought that any one would bother them now, and with a little sigh of contentment she returned to her book.

"Now, I wonder who that is," Helen pouted.

She waited while Mary came in from the kitchen and opened the door, and then the girl came to the door of the living room and beckoned to Helen.

Helen nodded.

"Could I see your husband for a few minutes, please?"

"Why certainly, come right in," Helen responded cordially, and led the way into the cozy living room.

Warren rose and Helen said simply, "This gentleman wants to see you, Warren."

"Of course you don't know me, Mr. Curtis," the shabby stranger began.

"But I am Ted Brown's father."

Helen recalled vaguely that Warren's office boy was called Ted Brown.

"You missed a ring, didn't you, sir? A queer looking thing in the shape of a snake."

Warren acquiesced, and Helen smiled to herself.

"I might as well come right to the point," the stranger was saying. "He was sitting in one of the comfortable chairs and he still clung to the shabby felt hat."

"Ted just told me that he had taken the ring. I don't know what possessed the boy; he's a good boy and I have always found him honest, but he took it."

asked gently enough. Helen looked at him in surprise.

"Ted told me this evening that he had the ring," the man went on. "He said he always wanted it from the first time he had ever seen it on your finger."

"Of course I don't expect you to understand, sir, but the boy is sorry," he told me to-night that he just couldn't bear to keep it any longer; that he hadn't slept since it happened, I thought I'd better come right up and bring it to you, and if you don't mind—Ted is young, you know—you won't have him punished."

"Of course not," said Helen, horrified.

The man turned to her.

"Of course I don't expect Mr. Curtis to keep him. I told Ted that; but if you'll just give him another chance to make good."

The man pulled a little box out of his pocket, and handed it over to Warren.

"There it is, sir, safe and sound," Warren undid the wrappings, and there, reposing on a bed of pink cotton, was the missing ring. He had never expected to see it again, and never would have if it had not been for the unexpected honesty of an utter stranger.

Warren is Thankful

"I don't know what to say to you, Mr. Brown," Warren said, "but I certainly am obliged to you. I wouldn't have lost the ring for a great deal, and I'm sure a lot to have it back."

You tell Ted that I shall expect him back in his old place on Monday. We all make mistakes, you know, and I don't want to be the one to judge this boy. We'll see how well he works; and as for you, I want to give you a little something for your trouble."

And Warren slipped a bill into the hard hand.

"Oh, no," the man protested. "I don't need anything for doing the only thing I could do."

"Take it and buy a present for your wife," Warren urged. "She needs to know how you got the money. You earned it all right. I'll bet it wasn't an easy thing to come up here and tell me what you did."

Warren slipped the bill into the man's coat pocket and then turned to Helen as the outer door closed.

"Well, what do you know about that?" he exclaimed.

"Do you want to know what I really think?" Helen asked with spirit.

"Sure," Warren responded good naturedly.

"Well, I think it ought to be a lesson to you in honesty. You didn't have any scruples about keeping change that didn't belong to you the other night, you said you would feel like a fool going back and telling the man that he had given you too much. But this man had no scruples about coming up here and telling you that he had taken the ring. I don't know what possessed the boy; he's a good boy and I have always found him honest, but he took it."

"How did it happen?" Warren asked.

A SMART COSTUME FOR LATE SUMMER

Tans and Soft Browns Are Modish Made Up in Various Ways

By MAY MANTON

9121 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Blouse with Deep Collar, 34 to 44 bust.

9122 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Four or Five-Piece Skirt, 24 to 34 waist.

Both the blouse and the skirt shown here are new and smart and the two together make one of the essentially useful costumes that are always in demand. The materials illustrated are summer weight Scotch cheviot for the skirt, in shades of tan and brown, and tan colored handkerchief linen for the blouse, but capes could be made in any reasonable materials.

The blouse can be made without the ruffles on the collar and the sleeves but they are exceedingly new and exceedingly fashionable and they will be found very generally becoming.

For the medium size the blouse will require 3 1/2 yards of material 27 inches wide, 2 1/2 yards 36 or 2 3/4 yards 44; and for the skirt will be needed, 6 3/4 yards 27, 5 1/4 yards 36 or 5 1/4 yards 44; it is 3 1/2 yards in width at the lower edge.

The pattern of the blouse No. 9121 is cut in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure and of the skirt No. 9122 in sizes from 24 to 34 inches waist measure. They will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents for each.

Suggestions For Sale of Fancy Eggs, Wholesale and Retail

How to Obtain Good Outlets and the Prices That May Be Expected

Directions For Packing and Shipping Eggs in Crates and Cartons

By Prof. Frank C. Hare, Poultry Husbandman, Clemson College, South Carolina

Next in importance to the production of fancy table eggs is finding a regular outlet for them at good prices. Their sale in regulation shipping crates through commission merchants or to a private trader, packed in sealed cartons, is to be considered. This article is intended to point out some of the easiest ways to secure both markets.

There are two methods of selling fancy eggs. One is by shipping in the regulation wooden crates on two holding thirty dozen, to a commission merchant, and the other is by selling the output to the local trade in cartons holding one dozen eggs. The former method is more dependable for the owner of an egg farm, the capacity of which in fancy eggs is sufficient to fill two crates in not over five days. This requires a daily production of at least 150 selected eggs. Express companies do not weigh egg crates, but bill them at 53 pounds each. Two crates are billed at 106 pounds, which weight is sufficient to give them the lowest express rate.

Selling eggs through a commission merchant is advantageous. He will handle the entire product at all seasons; the eggs are paid for weekly; there is, with reasonable care in selecting the commission merchant, no loss from bad debts. The seconds and thirds should be packed in separate cases, and they will bring what they are worth.

New York Egg Quotations

An explanation of some of the grades of eggs sold on the New York market, with the wholesale quotations (prices paid the shippers by the commission merchants) of these grades on June 21, 1916, furnishes interesting information to many. The highest prices were naturally paid for "State, Penna. and nearby hennery whites, fine to fancy, 28 at 29 cents."

When the production of eggs is sufficient to justify selling them through a commission merchant, the producer should be able to obtain the highest prices for his product. The highest prices of the year are paid in November. Here are a few of the quotations for last November to indicate what can be expected this winter: "State, Penna. and nearby hennery whites, fine to fancy, 60 to 62; hennery browns, 40 at 41; fresh gathered, extra fine, 44 at 45; extra firsts, 41 at 43; firsts, 35 at 40; dirties, No. 1, 22 at 23."

Whether the cement user makes his own private tests or not, it must be satisfying to know that the ALPHA Cement he uses is made under the strict supervision of chemists, who test hourly, day and night, to be sure the proportioning is exact, the burning thorough, and the grinding finer than required by standard specifications. Under this system, it is impossible for cement lacking proper binding power to leave an ALPHA plant.

ALPHA THE GUARANTEED CEMENT

is the brand we unhesitatingly recommend. We know that it can be depended on always to make concrete that will stand the severest tests. Every bag of it is guaranteed by the makers and by us to more than meet the U. S. Government standard for strength. And ALPHA costs no more than any other good cement.

Come in and get a copy of "ALPHA Cement—How to Use it." This 80-page illustrated book shows how to make scores of permanent improvements with ALPHA. Phone us or drop us a line, if you can't call.

CALLAHAN BEATS WOLGAST

Special to the Telegraph

New York, Aug. 26.—Frankie Callahan outboxed Ad Wolgast last night in every round of a ten-round bout in Brooklyn. Callahan forced the fighting all the way. Wolgast frequently clinched and covered up. He was nearly knocked out in the ninth round, when Callahan landed a right swing on the jaw. Wolgast wrenched 18 1/2 pounds and Callahan 13 1/2.
