

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

A GIRL AND A MAN

A New and Vital Romance of City Life by Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XXI
Copyright, 1916, Star Company.
Agnes' sense of irritation against Philip Hale was not dispelled as the hours passed. She was not actually angry with him, yet she felt that he should have had enough consideration for her to protect her from such comments as his behavior toward her might cause. These thoughts were her companions while her fingers were busy with her typewriter.

When she had finished the last letter she handed it to her employer. She did not look at him, for she was painfully self-conscious since the incident of Philip's note.

"Is there anything more I can do before I leave, Mr. Hale?" she asked.

"Nothing," he answered. "You may go home now. I am going myself as soon as I finish signing these."

"Good-day!" she said, but he had taken up his pen again and did not reply.

The outer office was deserted except for one of the clerks and Joe, who were chatting together, and Philip Hale, who was sitting at his desk reading a newspaper. Involuntarily, Agnes walked past him lightly hoping that he would not hear her and look up. It would be awkward were he to speak to her now, just when his father might be coming out of his room.

So successful was she that she crossed the open space and reached the cloak closet without his seeing her. As she pinned on her hat, she saw him rise, take up his hat and go over to Mr. Hale's office. Evidently father and son were going home together. Now was her opportunity to slip away.

Philip Appears
Snatching up her gloves, she started toward the entrance when, with a sense of exasperation, remembered that she had left her jacket hanging in the closet.

Turning, she went back for it, and as she again started across the room, Philip appeared in the door of the inner office and stood there awaiting his father. She must not meet him, she resolved, so would pretend not to see him. She went on buttoning her gloves, never raising her eyes. Yet, just as she reached the door, she heard a step behind her and Philip's low voice speaking her name.

"Agnes!" he murmured, peremptorily. "I want an answer to my question. May I come to-morrow night?"

"Oh, Phil," she breathed, not to see what her father thought. "Please go back before he comes out."

"Then say I may come to-morrow," he persisted.

"Oh, yes!" she exclaimed, in an agony of nervousness.

"What are you afraid of?"—Phil began, then, as she turned away, he added—"you aren't angry with me, are you?"

"Go back!" she ordered, trying to pass him.

But she was too late, for at that instant Mr. Hale appeared in the door of the office. Her worst fears were realized. He had seen her and his son talking together. With a gasp, she hurried out into the hall, signaled for the elevator and reached the street before she allowed herself time to think.

Seated in the subway, she tried to review the day's happenings calmly, in the hope that, by doing this, she would be able to quiet her sense of panic.

But it was in vain. She could not ignore the truth that Mr. Hale had detected her receiving a note from his son—whom he was not aware she had ever met outside his office—and that later he had come upon her talking in a low voice to him. And it was all because Philip was not willing to follow her instructions, to do as she had urged him to do.

Well, if he did not object to getting himself into trouble with his father, he might at least have enough consideration for her not to place her in such a position that Mr. Hale might class her with the designing girls of whom Annie Rooney had spoken so freely.

If her employer suspected her of making clandestine appointments with his son, of getting clandestine communications from him, he would be justified in discharging her.

A Sad Intuition
Of course, Philip might try to make things right by telling his father the truth—and yet, unless she was mistaken, William Hale would not approve of his boy's friendship with a girl in her humble sphere. Since her father had said that the old man might raise the devil at first.

She wished she had never allowed Annie to speak of the matter—and yet she had felt that nobody could ever suspect her of belonging to the class that the Irish girl had mentioned. She might have been able to forget the whole discussion but for the dreadful concatenation of circumstances. Indeed, Annie would not have introduced the subject had Philip not smiled at Agnes when she gave him a message from his father.

Yes, it all came back to Philip. All this horrid mess could not have occurred but for him; it was all unnecessary—if Phil had not been so reckless, so regardless of appearances. Yes, she was angry with him.

She was glad that she had told him he might come to see her to-morrow night. Then they could talk things out, and she would say just what she thought of his conduct. If he had at last confessed the truth to his father—

She stopped herself with an impatient movement. She had been thinking around in a circle. Moreover, she had forbidden Philip to tell his father how matters stood between them. She suddenly recollected this now.

Had she not made him promise to keep silence? Then he could give the elderly man no satisfactory explanation of his behavior. What must her employer think of her!

A STYLISH SKIRT IN SOFT WOOLENS

Suggestions of Drapery Makes Graceful Lines For Wear With Plain Blouse

By MAY MANTON

9139 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Two or Three-Piece Skirt, 24 to 30 waist.

This is a skirt available for many different materials. If it is gathered it is suited to the thinner ones. If it is plaited it can be used for serge and the like. Pockets may or may not be inserted in the sides. Here, the upper edge is finished with a frill and that finish is a smart one when a plain blouse is worn, but the skirt can be cut off at the belt line if preferred. It can be made in two or in three pieces as the material is wider or narrower, that is, with or without the seam at the center back.

For the medium size will be needed, 8 1/4 yards of material 27 inches wide, 6 3/4 yards 36 or 5 yards 44; the width at the lower edge is 4 yards and 8 inches.

The pattern No. 9139 is cut in sizes from 24 to 30 inches waist measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

AMUSEMENTS

"For the Man She Loved," a melodrama of mystery, emotion, laughter and tears is what is promised to theatergoers at the Orpheum, to-morrow and Saturday, with matinee both days. This beautiful play had its first presentation by the Keith players at the Hudson Theater, New York, and critics, it is said, pronounced it an interesting story of great strength.

Jolly, tender sentiment, lively dialogue, spectacular situations, thrilling climaxes and poetic justice are the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" all are prettily blended in the ancient-honored "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which the Stetson Company will offer at the Orpheum, Monday (Labor Day), matinee and night.

As a happy-go-lucky Irishman in the new Irish play, "The Dupe," will be exhibited at the time to-day. The story, written by the late J. M. G. Leary, is a comedy of character that calls forth the best efforts of that comedian as an actor and singer. The "Birth of a Nation" is described as a delightful blending of sentiment and comedy. Mr. Wilson will present "My Killarney Rose" at the Orpheum, Tuesday, matinee and night, for the benefit of the Knights of Columbus Building Fund.

On the same bill will be shown the fourth episode of "The Grip of Evil," entitled "The Looters." Two reels of photoplay, which ask the question, "Is humanity in the Grip of Evil?" Each episode of this serial is a complete story, which asks this question, "Friday and Saturday. Those who will present Frank Keenan and Chase Ray in a new five-part feature, "Honor Thy Name." This is a picture on the same order and promises to equal "The Coward," both in heart interest and in dramatic situations. A new two-reel Keystone comedy will be on the same program.

"My Neighbor's Garden" is the title of a musical comedy appearing at the Majestic in the last show.
"My Neighbor's Garden" is, it is said, bright, happy comedy and a generous supply of musical numbers. Walter Milton and Company have a good laughing vehicle which they style, "Don't Walk in Your Sleep." Other acts on the bill are Fred and Adele Astaire, Orpheum favorites, who offer a piano singing and dancing act; Newhoff and Phelps, young couple, in a very good comedy singing act, and Jarrow, a clever magician.

First Withdrawal of Troops From Border Does Not Affect Pennsylvania; to Make Room

By Associated Press
Washington, D. C., Aug. 31.—Orders had been issued to-day for the first withdrawal of National Guard troops from the Mexican border. General Funston was under authorization of Secretary Baker to return 15,000 guardsmen, including three regiments from New York; two each from New Jersey, Illinois and Missouri; one each from California, Oregon, Washington and Louisiana; and six thousand regular coast artillerymen who have been serving as infantry.

Similar withdrawals will be continued within a few days, the War Department plans. It was expected the recent dispatch of additional troops which had not done border service was largely responsible for the return movement.

WEDDING AT LITITZ
Lititz, Pa., Aug. 31.—A wedding was solemnized to-day in the Moravian Church here, when Miss Bernice V. Harding, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Harding, of Chicago, was married to Jay F. Garber, of Lititz.

NO MOVE YET TO RIPRAP SLOPES

Gross Hasn't Had That Talk With Seitz; No Money For Subway

Despite the fact that water and weather conditions for outdoor improvement work along the River Front have never been so propitious as at present, no definite plans have been made as yet by Park Commissioner E. Z. Gross for the permanent treatment of the slopes above Hardscrabble.

Whether or not Mr. Gross intends to take any steps this Fall cannot be learned until the commissioner returns to-morrow from Johnstown where he is attending the annual convention of Pennsylvania third class cities.

More than a month ago Mr. Gross said he wanted to first consult with City Solicitor D. S. Seitz before he announced any plans.

The question of whether or not a portion of the $6,000 balance in the park improvement loan fund could be applied to defray the expenses of permanent fill and riprapping along the base of the slopes had been discussed in park officialdom and it is about this, according to Mr. Gross, that he wishes to ask the solicitor. Less than $9,000 remains in the park fund, but about $2,000 will be needed to purchase the Prospect Hill Cemetery Parkway strip. The remainder could be applied to the construction of the proposed subway under the Philadelphia and Reading tracks which is necessary to complete the new parkway through to Derry street. The park department officials have been informed, however, that the subway will cost between $15,000 and $20,000 and that consequently the park fund balance of $6,000 will be useless at present unless the remainder can be put to some use. Sufficient could readily be deducted from this balance to complete the improvement of the River Front Park north of Hardscrabble, in the opinion of city officials.

If enough money to finance the construction of the subway can be found however, there is nothing to hinder the city from proceeding with the work. The park department officials conferred with R. Boone Abbott, superintendent of the Philadelphia and Reading, on the subway project. Superintendent Abbott told Mr. Gross that so far as the railroad company is concerned, the park department could also go ahead any time with the building of the subway.

Indiana "Redheads" Mingle "Blends" at Convention

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 31.—Red hair of all descriptions, ranging from what might be termed a light pink to deeper "fire" shades, was to be seen at Broad Ripple Park when the first annual picnic and convention of Indiana "redheads" were held. Never has so much red been seen in Broad Ripple outside of holidays, when gaily colored bunting is hung out.

"Redheads" of various States also participated. The picnic occupied much of the time, but enough was

Thin People Can Increase Weight

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying: First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol—one tablet with every meal—for two weeks. Then weigh and measure yourself again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say and think. The scales and the tape measure will tell their own story, and many thin men and women we believe can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all the new flesh stays put.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food, it aims to turn the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepare it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. Much of this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol works to stop the waste and do it quickly and to make the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive. G. A. Gorgas and other leading druggists in this vicinity sell it in large boxes—forty tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back as found in each large box.—Advertisement.
