

A Clear Head Means Success

You cannot be successful in your work, either in office, factory, farm or home, when your thoughts are clouded, your brain sluggish, your body uncomfortable.

A closed system decreases your value. It makes you indolent, low spirited and ill tempered. Left alone, it leads to severe illness.

Manalin Corrects It.

It's an ideal laxative, that gently crosses your liver, renews the bowel action, and clears away the waste matter in your system. It enables your digestion to do its work, removes the fermentation in the intestines, gives the blood an opportunity to freshen itself, and brings to the brain and body a supply of pure, clean blood that makes both active and efficient.

Manalin may be obtained in liquid or in candy tablets. It's safe for all, pleasant to take and effective, without any unpleasant or harmful results. Many cases of constipation have been overcome by its use as directed.

Liquid, 50c and $1.00. Tablets, 10 and 25c.

War Veterans Offer Their Services in Time of Need

Chicago, Sept. 5. — The United Spanish War Veterans, holding their annual encampment here have adopted resolutions favoring preparedness on a large scale and offered their services to the President in event of military emergency.

A spirited contest for the office of commander in chief of the veterans is on to-day between Lieutenant Governor Barratt O'Hara, of Illinois, and Captain D. V. Chisholm, of Washington, D. C.

Episcopalians to Eliminate Obedy From Marriage Vow

Chicago, Sept. 5. — The commission of seven bishops, seven pastors and seven laymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church, appointed to revise the ritual of the church, has determined to eliminate the word "obey" from the marriage ceremony, it was learned here to-day.

The commission will report to the general convention of the church at St. Louis October 11. Radical changes are proposed in the ten commandments, the burial and baptismal services and in arrangements of various prayers. The Tenth Commandment, as an example, will be shortened to "Thou shalt not covet anything that's thy neighbor's" if the commission's report is adopted.

WISCONSIN HOLDS ELECTION

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 5. — Wisconsin voters face the third election this year when to-day candidates are to be selected to be voted upon at the general election on November 7 in the senatorial, gubernatorial, congressional and legislative contests. No voter will be allowed to split his ticket.

Malcolm G. Jeffers, Janesville, is opposing Robert M. La Follette, who seeks re-election to the United States Senate on the Republican ticket.

Does Your Husband Drink? Druggist Tells How to Cure the Liquor Habit at Home

Free Prescription Can Be Filled At Any Drug Store and Given Secretly

H. J. Brown, 409 West Superior Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, was for many years a confirmed drunkard. His friends and relatives despaired of ever redeeming him. His sister sought the best medical men in Europe in the hope that she might find something which would cure him. Finally she was recommended to an eminent chemist who gave her a private formula (the same as appears below) and told her how to use it. She had it filled at the drug store and gave it to him secretly. The results were startling. In a few weeks he was completely cured. That was over eight years ago and he has never touched a drop since. He now occupies a position of trust and is enthusiastic in his efforts to help others overcome the liquor habit. He feels that he can best give this by making public the same formula which cured him. Here is the prescription: Go to any first class drug store and get 14 Tescum powder. Drop one powder twice a day, in coffee, tea or any liquid. It is harmless, tasteless, odorless and cannot be detected by anyone. A lady who recently tried it on her husband reports: "My husband was on a spree when I got the powder, and he usually stays drunk from three to four weeks at a time. After putting the powder in his coffee for four days, he sobered up and has not taken a drink since and says he is through with it forever. He also complained that whisky did not taste the same. I shall not tell him what did it, but I am grateful for this help and I shall recommend it whenever possible."

NOTE—A leading druggist when shown the above article said: "Yes, Tescum is a very remarkable remedy for the drink habit. It is harmless, wonderfully effective and is having an enormous sale. Advise everyone who wishes to destroy the liquor habit to give it a trial. It is sold in this city by H. C. Kennedy, and all other first class druggists, who warrant it to do the work or refund the money.—Advertisement."

SILVER SANDALS

A Detective Story of Mystery, Love and Adventure.

By Clinton H. Stagg.

Copyright, W. J. Watt & Co., International News Service.

"You mean the crow that has been the mouthpiece of Silver Sandals for years?"

"Yes, to both questions."

"Funny we didn't see any sign of it when we searched the house. But then there wasn't a thing but the clippings and the photograph." He broke off quickly. "That feather you found?"

Colton nodded. "From the crow. I am playing it here against a pawn and the queen. It should be against the king!" He decided suddenly. His hand changed the pieces. He snapped on the incandescents so that the official could see the chessboard with its strange "men." "Here is the crim. The queen is Silver Sandals. The pawn is the waiter who guided us. He stayed behind to find the crow. But you frightened him away. He is the real George Nelson, waiter, age twenty-seven."

"How do you know that?"

"Because I'm blind. I've known it from the first. That's why I wanted you to locate him. I found out that there was a waiter a minute after he spoke to me. I touched his hand as he walked beside me to the house of Silver Sandals. He had the waiter's thumb, peculiarly developed by carrying a tray full of food. But I realized that a man in his condition couldn't have been the waiter who had helped the man to the table. I recognized him only as a pawn. That's why I wanted to know if the man the police had arrested was he. When it wasn't, I thought they had just made one of their mistakes, until the words of the crow told me that another had been drilled into the mechanical brain of the talking bird had picked up the words."

"But why should he have pretended to be a guide?"

"Why should he be in rags, if he was a good enough serving man to have had a position on Bracken's yacht?"

"Why is my secretary sleeping upstairs?" asked the blind man quietly.

"Hypnotism?"

"Yes. Superinduced by heavy drinking. He was gotten drunk so that his papers could be stolen. But he was too valuable a subject to let go. There was further use for him. He was kept under the influence of Silver Sandals because the waiter would naturally be the first person suspected by the police. And this waiter who had made his name and occupation so well known in the neighborhood that even the boys on the streets knew it was intended to be the blind to throw the police off the track — until my secretary became a better one. Oh, it was carefully planned; every step, every move."

"But I don't get it." Puzzlement brought slang in place of the official's usual careful diction. "The whole thing shows so many evidences of careful and elaborate planning, yet the results make a useless mess of unnecessary trouble."

"For instance?"

"The slashed wrists. Why, that alone almost precludes the possibility of murder, except for the marks of violence on the body. But there are so many easier and quicker ways of accomplishing the same result. And think of the evidence the police left behind when the police locate the place where the murder was done. The blood and the marks on the body showed that the man must have struggled fearfully."

"The struggling was all done before the wrists were slashed. There is no doubt that he was drugged first."

"But, great Scott! If they could drug him, why couldn't they poison him in the first place?"

"And the natural next question," piped in the blind man seriously. "Why didn't they leave him where he was murdered, instead of actually murdering him by bringing him to a public restaurant?"

"I don't understand any of it!" The confession came in the tone of a curse. "The silver-steal! Colton, think of the cold-bloodedness of fixing that to a dead body."

"Colton's fingers touched the dime on his chessboard. That has already taken its place," he said. "Meaning," he added, "that I have already solved that part of the problem. The brace was not put on the dead body."

"But it was there!"

"It was worn before the man was dead."

"You mean that the murderers forced the man who was to be killed to adjust it himself?" The district attorney could not keep the horror from his voice.

"No. I mean that he donned it without coercion. He put it on willingly."

"Why — why —" The interrogations came as gasps from the official.

"Certainly. Common sense and the evidence will help you in that. The death notices, the photograph, the bottle of wine served at the table, the papers written by himself, the strange words of the ventriloquist despite the assertions of thousands of persons that she had been deaf and dumb for a quarter of a century. Even the method of getting him to the dining-room points to but one thing. The method of getting him to the restaurant?" That part of the blind man's statement made the district attorney forget everything else. That last sentence brought back to his mind the fact that no one seemed able to tell how the strange couple had gotten to the diningroom where they had been met by the waiter. "Do you know how they got to the diningroom?" he asked.

"Through the private diningroom that was built especially for the accommodation of Philip J. Bracken when he is in town, and which connects with his private suite by means

Correct Information About

Fall's Smartest Dress Goods

The Month Between

In the good "old" days of storekeeping, no one knew what to do in September. It was known as the month between, when the energy of the months past were forgotten and only the hopes of the beginning of Fall were in mind.

But that was years ago in this store. To-day there is vital aggressiveness, an up-and-doing spirit here for our people are convinced that busy minds, busy hands and busy hearts forget that it is warm or rainy. The sun is always shining in their work.

And so it is quite natural that you should find many, many new things here, quite a bit ahead of the season. Quite in time to prepare for those who will soon be going to school.

To select the garment to have made this Fall, without first seeing this great assortment of new materials, we might be bold enough to venture—is a mistake.

This display will give you many many ideas as to what to wear and the materials that will be best suited to the garment. The pattern, the color and the quality is important,—especially the color, since dyes are still to be looked upon with caution.

Our departments of Dress Goods and Silks are now on Dress Parade.

PASSAGE OF R. R. BILL IS ASSAILED

from any power in the country, no matter what the consequences.

The address was delivered in the auditorium before a crowd of 3,000, a large part of which was openly hostile and had attempted to start demonstrations for Wilson by hisses and cat-calls. His fighting words won the crowd for the time and found applause:

He said:

I will say this further, that I believe there is no grievance with respect to labor that cannot be settled by a fair, candid examination of the facts. We have in the past had to deal frequently with the opposition of employers to the principle of arbitration. Sometimes they have refused to arbitrate disputes and I would not surrender it to anybody in the country. I believe that anything that is right in this country can be settled right. What has our great Republic government done? What are our free institutions? We have come down the long course of history with the people fighting slowly, now with defeat and now with victory, for a recognition of the reign of reason instead of the reign of tyranny and force.

We have emerged into a great country peopled with intelligent men and women.

We have educational opportunities on every side. We have an alert electorate. We have people who understand expertly all the various activities of our life from every possible side.

Stands For Arbitration

Now, then, I stand for two things—first, for the principle of fair, impartial, thorough, candid arbitration, and second, for legislation on facts according to the necessities of the case, and I am opposed to being dictated to either in the executive department or in Congress by any power on earth before the facts are known and in the absence of the facts. We have a great country and a great future, but it can only be preserved in one way.

That way is the way of all honest, fair investigation and candid treatment. Show me the way that is right and I will take it; but I won't take any way that I do not know anything about.

Mr. Hughes has been ignored by the labor unions here, as they were celebrating the passage of the Adamson bill. He never made a more vigorous or effective address. The best demonstration of the night came when Mr. Hughes, leaving the railroad strike situation, turned to Mexico.

There were cries of "Woodrow" from the gallery and several demanded to know what Mr. Hughes would have done.

"I would have protected the lives of our citizens!" he exclaimed. The crowd jumped to its feet and cheered for a full minute.

It was the most unusual meeting Mr. Hughes has faced, and the open and at times insulting evidence of hostility stirred him to more vigor of word and action than he has ever shown since the early days of the tour.

Reaches Louisville

Mr. Hughes reached Louisville at 8 o'clock to-day enroute to Lexington from Nashville and held a brief conference on his private car with A. F. Hert, western representative of the Republican National Committee. A brief rear platform address had been placed tentatively on the program but this was abandoned. It was announced that Mr. Hughes would visit the training camp at Plattsburg, N. Y., on September 12. Mr. Hughes left here at 8:30 o'clock after a thirty-minute stay.

working at high pressure," he observed. "He'll lose no time in getting to the Beaumonde. He's going to make sure that he doesn't miss a trick."

The district attorney shook his head in helpless bewilderment. "I don't know where I am," he confessed frankly. "Your statement that the man made all the plans to hide the body from the murderer is too much."

"That has been obvious from the very first." The first puff of smoke from a newly lighted cigar ended the sentence. "Simply because the very elaborateness of the thing made it the only possibility. The timing of events alone proves that the thing was planned months in advance. According to the expert opinion of Brown, the making of the framework to support the body took years. And common sense would tell any one that without the cooperation of the dead man there must have been slips. Remember that the final scene was timed to minutes!"

"More hypnosis!" the district attorney discovered suddenly. "The remarkable woman of the silver sandals; the one who hypnotized your secretary, and, you say, the missing waiter, Great Scott!" He mopped his forehead with his handkerchief. "Think of the diabolical ingenuity of compelling a man, by hypnosis, to prepare for his own murder months in advance!"

"A pretty theory," credited the blind man. "But false, or, rather, reversed."

"You mean—" hesitated the official.

"That the silver-sandaled woman and the girl were dominated absolutely by the will of the dead man!"

The watch beside the chessboard ticked off several seconds before the district attorney made reply. "That is the most incredible statement I ever heard!" he ejaculated, when he had carefully turned the blind man's statement over in his mind to see what lay under it.

"It is true, nevertheless."

"But it's unreasonable! It is practically an admission that the dead man forced three —"

"I said the woman and the girl were controlled by the dead man," interrupted Colton. "I did not mention Bracken."

"Two—the correction came chokingly—two persons drawn into a murder pact, with himself as the victim!"

Colton nodded. "Practically that," he admitted.

"I can't believe that sane persons would deliberately put themselves into the electric chair!" The district attorney was on his feet again, walking back and forth in characteristic lawyer fashion. "That is what it means. According to your statement, they are either murderers or accessories before and after the fact."

Thornley Colton shrugged his shoulders. "I expect Captain McMann to point out the murderer for me," he said simply.
