By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"For a strong character—bold design, constant practice, frequent mistakes," says an old writer.

To the weakling that offers no suggestions for strength when first he reads it—but if he thinks at all he must see that it offers every promise of growth.

Nothing can be done without plan. From writing an essay to building a house there is always needed an outline—a plan. One has to take stock of one's material and the use to which one intends putting it.

Suppose you mean to be a school teacher—your training and education have to be along the lines that will enable you to have the necessary knowledge and the knowledge of how to impart it.

Child psychology, pedagogy, and the modern 'scholastic' methods must be added to your education. You have to plan your training definitely with something definite in view.

So for whatever you want to do or believe you have to have a plan or design bravely conceived and strongly mapped out.

Once you have decided on a plan of living, you must test it. One has to live fully and strongly every day. One cannot idly waste hours and days and months, and then, over decisions and back away from actually carrying out one's schemes. Instead, one has to put into use the conceptions of life one forms.

So much, any one who thinks at all will readily concede, is needed for the formation of character. But at "frequent mistakes" many of my readers will balk.

When you fail, learn from that failure how not to fail again. Don't give up and let your mistakes crush you, instead crush them under foot and climb over them to achieve and success.

Don't waste any time in regrets but be glad that now you know better.

And in the fullness of deciding when you want to do, of doing it bravely and of surmounting failure you will evolve for yourself the greatest blessing to be found in your own nature—strength.

THE SMALL FOLKS ARE FAVORED TOO

Much Thought Is Spent on Frocks for the Little Ones by Designers

By MAY MANTON

9117 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Child's Dress, 6 months or 1 year, 2 and 4 years.

Mothers of tiny children will be sure to welcome this little frock. It is essentially simple yet it can be made very dainty by the use of such simple needlework as shown in the illustration. The lower edge is straight and here, it is simply turned under to form a deep hem and finished with braid stitching, but it would be easy to hemstitch or to embroider a little vine or to treat in some such way if a more dressy frock and a white frock were wanted, or again, it could be made from flouncing or bordered material and many of the latter are very charming and admirably adapted to the little folk's needs. The little touch of smocking at the neck edge is very dainty and pretty as well as eminently fashionable, while it means little labor. The frock can be cut to form a round neck in place of the high one, however, and made with short sleeves, and when it is treated in that way it is perhaps better adapted to the very warm days of August. On the figure, a dotted batiste is shown with the stitching in color to match the dots.

For the 2 year size will be needed, 2 1/2 yards of material 27 inches wide, 2 yards 36 or 1 1/2 yards 44, or 1 1/2 yards of flouncing 24 inches wide and 1/2 yard of material 36.

The pattern No. 9117 is cut in sizes for children of 6 months or 1 year, 2 and 4 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

"Captain McMann!" exclaimed the district attorney, making mental note of the blind man's evasion. "I thought you were fighting him."

"He is fighting me," corrected the blind man quietly. "But I am making him help me. They took away my eyes in this case. A jerk of his discovered the coming of the other that it was Sydney Thames whom he meant. 'They expected me to be helpless, and another pawn in the game. But they can't beat me in unalterable resolution. The lean, cleft chin was rigidly ominous. Under the skin of the cheeks the muscles played. The district attorney could imagine the eyes beneath the folds of the alcohol-soaked bandages gleaming with the light of resolve. Despite himself, he shivered slightly. For the first time in his life he saw the blind; ruthless, unyielding. A blind bloodhound!

"Did you get any sleep last night?" asked the attorney, his head.

A faint smile softened the lines around the tight-drawn lips. "You forget that but twenty hours or so have elapsed since the dead man was discovered. It is only last night, you know. Things have moved so quickly that it seems much longer." He touched the watch beside him. "Nine-twenty," he announced. "McMann should have been at the Beaumonde ten minutes ago."

"Are you going to let him go over the ground before you get a chance?" asked the surprised district attorney.

"He is right there," said the blind man. "I am merely waiting for the link that has been missing. Ah!" The exclamation came as the telephone bell tinkled its signal. Colton took the receiver, and the official held his breath to hear the one-sided conversation.

"Are you going to let him go over the ground before you get a chance?" asked the surprised district attorney.

"He is right there," said the blind man. "I am merely waiting for the link that has been missing. Ah!" The exclamation came as the telephone bell tinkled its signal. Colton took the receiver, and the official held his breath to hear the one-sided conversation.

"Great Heaven!" The hotel manager's voice trembled. "That son of a—"

"He took a turn about the office, and when he spoke again his voice was steady. 'I've always loved that me and said that he's the right girl, I wanted to know if he could have a girl to his wife's private dining room. I knew it was going against his father, but here was a chance to help the kid along instead of giving him the kick he usually gets. I was away all yesterday afternoon, and my assistant promised to look after them. I didn't get back till late, and I never thought a thing about it until this morning, when McMann wanted to search the suite. Of course, I was nearly crazy, but when we got there I didn't see a crumb. The boy apparently hadn't arrived, and there was nothing to show that the suite had been occupied even though the two policemen went through it. Now they're in the suite!"

"Almost exactly the same story he told me," exclaimed the district attorney.

"When did he visit you, Mr. Carl?" asked Colton.

"Day before yesterday."

"Ah, the same day he visited the district attorney; before he bleached his hair and took his place in your dining room."

"He was the waiter who helped the dead man!" The exclamatory sentence was a combination of pain and surprise and certainty. "Of course! Who else could it be? My assistant has only been here about six months, and he wouldn't know the son of the owner even without the disguise. Philip hasn't been around in several years."

"No word of your assistant yet?" asked Colton casually.

The manager shook his head. "He was lucky enough to get away when he had growned Carl. The police are after him to answer a lot of their fool questions."

"Yes," murmured Colton dryly.

The tone caused the district attorney to have a question, but the blind man gave him no chance. "I guess McMann has had time to look over that suite," he said, as he rose. "Mind showing me the way up?"

"You don't expect to find more evidence of—Bracken's guilt?" The manager's tone was that of a man who has been overworked and expects nothing.

"I expect to find something that the police are overlooking," the blind man replied, as he waited for a guiding hand.

The district attorney said nothing, but the look on his face expressed volumes: it was the look of a man utterly weary. He had been hoping against hope that the suspicion which

Senator Demands That Democrats Stop Juggling and Present Facts Clearly

Washington, D. C., Sept. 6. — That the Federal Treasury is bankrupt and that officials of the Wilson administration have juggled the figures of the Treasury reports in an effort to deceive the people was the charge made by Senator Boies Penrose in the Senate yesterday afternoon. In a speech of more than two hours on the Revenue bill the Pennsylvania Senator attacked the Democrats for mismanagement and inefficiency. He closed the debate for the Republican side.

"Authorizations binding the government to appropriations for the year 1917 aggregate the fabulous grand total of $2,347,127,690," said Senator Penrose.

"I make the statement without any exaggeration that the Federal Treasury is bankrupt. The difficulty of obtaining accurate information as to the condition of the United States Treasury prompts me to make the suggestion that Congress should put a stop to the practice of juggling with these figures and provide a law specifically how the daily treasury balance and public debt statement should be prepared.

Miscellaneous Statements

"If a bank official undertook to present an account of assets and liabilities in the misleading way which is now being made the practice of the Treasury Department to present such figures he would very likely discover that he had involved himself quite seriously with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency if he had not actually incurred some of the penalties made and provided in such cases."

Senator Penrose submitted a detailed statement in support of his charge of Democratic extravagance in the expenditure of public funds. He also attacked the Democrats for sectionalism in the imposition of taxes in the Revenue bill.

Your Telephone Should SAVE Not Lose TIME

When you turn to your telephone you want IMMEDIATE action. That's why you telephone rather than send a letter or go in person. You pay for telephone service not to lose time but to save time.

Sometimes over the old manual system your calls are handled with reasonable promptness, but you know too well the frequent exasperating delays. Just as at a ticket office the rule is "first come, first served," so in the manual telephone exchange. There are often three or four calls ahead of yours and YOU HAVE TO WAIT YOUR TURN.

If there was a girl in the central office whose sole duty it was to handle YOUR calls such delays would not occur. They do not occur when you

Use the Automatic

On the Automatic System there is ALWAYS an operator INSTANTLY ready to serve you. This operator is not a human being, but a machine. The Automatic operator never gets tired, never forgets, never gives you the wrong number. It is MADE, not PAID to do its work. You never have to "wait in line" until the calls ahead are disposed of. There is but one answer—Use the Automatic.
