GOVERNOR FOUND FARMERS ACTIVE

Greatly Interested in Agricultural Advancement Along First Tour

"Pennsylvania is ripe for agricultural advancement. We saw some wonderful farms and some fine country, and what is more we found the people interested in farming and anxious to expand," said Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh, in talking about the success of the first of his three tours of the farming districts of the State. The Governor got into Harrisburg last night from Wellsboro, pleased with the greetings he had received, but delighted with the interest displayed in the conservation of agricultural resources, and the growth of scientific farming ideas in the State.

"Why do you know that while I had been through that country I had not had a chance to study it from an agricultural standpoint and I was surprised at the way the people are turning to agricultural advancement and the commercial to take in rural life. We have a splendid farming country in our northern counties and in the Susquehanna Valley, and it is going to produce more before long. There are energetic, thrifty people in the districts they traverse and I am going to do all I can to help them." Secretary of Agriculture Patton said this morning that what impressed him was the tremendous interest shown by the people along the route of the tour, the fact that folks traveled with the Governor, and insisted upon stops to hear a few words. Mr. Patton said that the country through which the tour passed was a revelation to many of those in the party and that they realize how important is agriculture in Pennsylvania and what the Governor is trying to do for it. The next tour will start Tuesday and comprise the northeastern part of the State.
