Great Britain Becoming Independent as to Dyes

Edinburgh, Scotland, Sept. 20. — (Correspondence of the Associated Press) — The three days' session of the annual meeting of the Society of Chemical Industry showed that the chemical industry of Great Britain would in the future largely break away from its dependence on Germany and other countries so far as dye and fine chemicals were concerned, and at the same time brought out prominently the need for still further research and development on the part of Britishers generally. Papers were read indicating the enormous waste of by-products of coal going on in the country, while it was asserted five per cent. of coal itself was wasted in some pits, twenty per cent. in others and forty per cent. lost in certain Doncaster pits. On the subject of tar distillation—a process yielding about a dozen chemical products—a speaker stated that the industry had suffered from lack of co-operation and that more scientific attention with a central research laboratory were required to recapture the fine chemical and color trade from Germany. Regarding the prospects of British dye supplies it was stated that at present the necessary products were required for the government, colors varying from khaki to violet being required, but that after the war acids would be in abundant supply and with plants now in course of construction as well as organized research, the British chemist was being given a chance to compete with the German chemist as well as with those of America and Japan. It was generally agreed that some state subsidy or protection by tariff should be afforded for at least ten years. At the final session a paper was read on "rare earths" its author asserting that the situation was full of promise for Great Britain's future independence of foreign raw materials, largely used in chemical manufacture. Professor Louis stated that he had just returned from an official investigation of the resources of rare earth in India and in his opinion Great Britain was in a vastly superior position to Germany in quantity and quality and raw material. A discussion on the patent laws of the country showed a sharp difference of opinion between lawyers and patent agents and inventors point of view but all agreed that reforms were needed. TURKISH WOMEN PAINT Constantinople, Sept. 20. — As an evidence of the constant increase of Occidental influences in Turkey, a considerable number of young Turkish women were permitted to exhibit their paintings at an exhibition, just concluded, of the work of the pupils of the Imperial Lyceum Club. Some 200 paintings in all, many of them by women, and all of them by Turkish painters, were placed on view. Critics familiar with Occidental painting and judging the work exhibited by Occidental ideals, commented very favorably on many of them. The jury of award was headed by the Grand Vizier himself a painter. He has been empowered to have struck off medallions to be awarded at the two exhibitions annually that are contemplated for the future.
