Briquette Fuel Co. Ready to Place Produce on Market

Officials of the Gamble Fuel Briquette Company announced to-day in an advertisement that the company is ready to place on the market a manufactured product to take the place of coal, which produces, it claims, greater heat and gives less ash than coal.

The company, which has its offices in the Kunkel building, just completed the manufacturing plant at Ninth and Dock streets. Because of the large deposits of river coal, the process can be carried on here extensively, and the plant will turn out from twenty to twenty-five thousand tons yearly.

River coal is pulverized, mixed with carbon binder and molded into "briquettes." They can be used in furnaces, stoves, ranges and open fire grates, the company claims. Deliveres are being made from the plant and Dr. Gamble, owner of the patent process, is at the plant at all times superintending the work. Officers of the company are: J. M. Delaney, president, and George E. Hartman, secretary and Transurer.
