CHAPTER XXXIII

Agnes Gets a Good Meal

Even up in the offices of Hale & Bainbridge, freshened by the whirring of many electric fans, the heat was disagreeably noticeable. Down on the street level, it was intense.

As Agnes Morley and Hasbrook Bainbridge stepped out of the office building, the girl caught her breath. The day was humid, and the sun shone through a haze that seemed to make its rays more oppressive than usual. Everything—including humidity—was in a bath of steam vapor.

"This is awful!" Agnes exclaimed.

"It surely is," her companion agreed, signaling a passing taxicab. "I want to go down to Baher's restaurant—on Park Row, you know," he told the driver. Then he added to Agnes: "We'd die if we tried to walk it."

"Oh, we could walk—easily." she suggested he would have begun with a cocktail or would have begun with a cocktail or would have begun with a cocktail or would have begun with a wine or punch. It was evident she was as as fe with Mr. Bainbridge as she was as as afe with Mr. Bainbridge as she was certainly happier. "I am ordering only cold things," he said to her. "Not only because hot out also because I do not want to keep not waste time waiting for them to be prepared."

Agnes had not known that she was hungry until the tempting viands were placed before her. Then, as she cit was cortainly happier.

Her doubts on this subject were quickly set at rest as the taxi stopped in front of a tall stone building. An elevator bore the couple to a great ality restaurant many floors above the street.

"We want a table near the window," Balnbridge told the head waiter.

"Oh, what a view!" Agnes exclaimed as ale looked out over the tops of many tall buildings.

The Food Excellent

"The food here is as good as the view," Balnbridge said. "Will you suggest something you want, or shall I do the ordering?"

"You do it please," she replied.
"It must be something suited to this weather,55 he explained to her, catching her wondering eye as he finished his talk with the waiter.

It certain was such a meal as one would like in midsummer, she reflected. It was also such a meal as shows unaccustomed to.

First, there were cherry-stone clams on a bed of cracked ice. Then came fellide essence of tomato in cups. After this was cold roast capon with a Spanish salad, and last of all, ice cream in halved canteloupes. Her companion did not suggest any kind of liquor, but, instead ordered iced coffee with whipped cream. She noticed his omission of any stronger beverage and again decided that he was a very nice man. "It is getting late and I must hurry back to the office," she declared.

"Agnes had not known that she was hungry until the tempting viands were placed before her. Then, as she listened to her companion's pleasant chat, she found herself eating with relish.

"The heat had killed my appetite lately," she remarked. "But it has all cut of the rut once in a while," Bain-bridge rejoined. "That was why I asked you to come out with me this sure I would feel better for having a little tete-a-tete with someone whom I liked."

She flushed. "You scarcely know me well enough to be sure you like me," she told him.

A SUBTLE COMPLIMENT

"It's good to feel this air on one's face—isn't it?" she said.

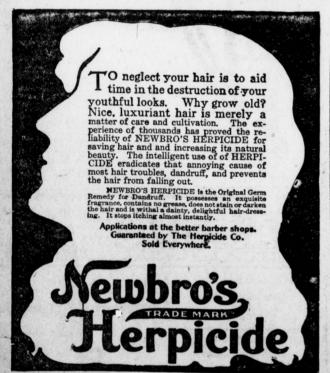

She did not know where Baher's was and wondered if it was one of those porcelain-lettered restaurants with which she had become so well acquainted of late. If so, she hoped that none of the clerks from the office would be there.

Her doubts on this subject were quickly set at rest as the taxt stopped in front of a tall stone building. An elevator bore the couple to a great airy restaurant many floors above the street.

Just now, while rocking in the dark,
I heard a soft step on the stair,
And, while I could not see my boy,
I knew that he was standing there. Then quickly, in a firm embrace.

He threw his arms about my neck—
A savage little burst of love
I did not have the heart to check.
He hugged until his tiny strength
Gave out, and then I captured him;
A hug in turn, of equal length,
Whilst both the eyes of me were dim.

It was the suddenness of it: Spontaneous—that made me think,
Like some young doe beside a stream
He ran, at Nature's call, to drink.
I thrilled at being loved so much;
I murmured out a fitful prayer;
And God was in each finger-touch,
The feeling of them was so fair.

Yes, Love was brooding in the heart When arms encircled, for a spell, And—maybe—we have lived apart—The kid and Daddy Jim—and, well, I only know those baby arms Brought back the joy of having him; Brought back a duty and a love, Whilst both the eves of me are dim.

The "Rocks" and "Dottes" and "Reds" Lead the World as All-Round General Purpose Fowls

By M. L. LONGFIELD

Author and Practical Poultryman America leads the world in the super-excellence of her breeds of poultry. This is not mere spread-cagicism.

China bred Cochins, Langshans, and Shanghais as thousand years. At the end of that time her breeds of poultry years. And in this half century we have not only perfected many femical and bred up to a fixed standard at least three of the greatest breeds of his fact. "IMPORTED" is a tag that has smaller meaning than formerly.

The American class includes some 13 different varieties. Every one of them has made its mark and representation. The great Plymouth Rocks probably hold the pre-eminence. As a general purpose fowl the Barred variety is all the breeds of fowls. The Wyandottes stand next to the "Rocks" in popular favor down to the thouse of the popular favor down to the Choice of the season of the fine was trained in the popularity of these two kinds of "Rocks" in popular favor down to the house of the popular favor down to the changing the popularity of these two kinds of "Rocks" in popular favor down to the change of the popularity of these two kinds of "Rocks" in popular favor down to the changing the popularity of these two kinds of "Rocks" in popular favor down to the change of the popular favor down t and demand.

The Plymouth Rock is found in American poultry yards more numerously probably than all other breeds of fowls combined. Why? Because it is first of all a UTILITY breed. For the same reason the Wyandottes and the Rhode Island Reds are sweeping to the front in every State. First of all they have the qualities that win in the markets. The typical American is wise; he seeks first utility and efficiency. Assured of these, he is assured of everything he desires besides.

What solid all-'round qualities in these great forefront American breeds! They are medium in size. Standard weight of Plymouth Rock tock, 9½ pounds. The Wyandottes and the Reds are one pound lighter. Hens are two pounds lighter than roosters. These weights are ideal for market fowls. The twelve-pound bird as well as the three or four-pound bird, will miss the mark of largest popularity in the broiler or roaster trade. In quality of meat, too, these three great breeds are probably second to none.

This move was made effective September 1st at which time C. S. Levitt, formerly traffic manager of the well-known export house of Gaston-Williams & Wigmore, joined the Chandier export staff to look after all matters pertaining to foreign shipments. Mr. Levitt is one of the most experienced men in export shipping, and his coming to the Chandler organization will greatly facilitate foreign movements of the popular Chandler Six.

It is not so generally recognized, perhaps, but one of the crucial phases of the turkeys development begins in 'October. Turkeys are now on the home-stretch; each moment of the shortening days must be utilized to get them on their way marketward. Each day lost postpones their shipment, and delays are costly. To make the most of one's flock, the turkeys must be taken in hand early in the Fall, which is the subject of next week's article, together with precautions against disease, and suggestions for protection against enemies.

FARMERS!

NOW, THEN-Make every acre produce more bushels.

HOW? There is only one way—put the real nature food in the soil that will fatten the wheat heads and fatten the berries in the heads—BIGGER HEADS and MORE WHEAT in the heads—this means A BIGGER CROP. You can't make your soil produce unless you first put the right kind of fertilizer or food there to nourish and feed the plants that make the crop.

Use Wizard Brand Pulverized Sheep Manure

BECAUSE IT IS A COMPLETE NATURAL FERTILIZER

A SOIL BUILDER, A CROP-MAKER

Because, too, no matter what kind of soil you have, or what its condition, Pulverized Sheep Manure will give it what it naturally needs, it is Nature's fertilizer, does as Nature intends, and it contains all necessary plant-food elements—Nitrogen, Phosphoric Acid and Potash—in combination with organic matter or humus, and it is this natural combination that produces the peculiar action and effect in the soil, which can be had only from animal manures. By using it, you are making your crops and, at the same time building up your soil and adding hundreds of dollars in value to your land. I sell many carloads of it, and I could give you testimonials on every kind of crop, if I had space, showing the wonderful results obtained by gardeners, farmers and florists who are using it.
