No Longer Identify Prisoners
Superintendent "You Understand Me" Windsor when asked this morning whether his department uses the Rertillon fingerprint system of identification, together with taking pictures of criminals, made no reply, but hurried into his private office with one of his staff and shut the door.

Chief of Police Wetzel, however, explained that although the detectives handled that work, he did not believe they were taking fingerprints or filing pictures of convicted criminals from Harrisburg, because the identification fund has been exhausted. He intinated that it was used to make improvements about the place before he become chief of the department. He said the Bertillon system should most certainly be continued.

Ex-City detectives in speaking of the abandonment of the Bertillon fingerprint system and the "mugging" of convicted offenders, declared that they considered it unwise for the city to discontinue the identification bureau, as practically every other city is using it.
