STREETS ABOUT CAPITOL SHOULD BE WIDENED. [Continued From First Page] Orelsby and J. William Bowman, were succeeded last evening by William H. Bennett, Sr., Arthur H. Bailey, C. M. Kaltwasser, George S. Reinhold, and Joseph H. Wallace, who will serve for a period of three years.

Governor's Corking Speech. "I consider it a privilege," began the Governor, "to be counted one of this body of men, banded together unselfishly and patriotically for the service of Harrisburg, who wish to see it one of the most beautiful and industrially important cities of the United States. We big, blundering Dutchmen are all right for this kind of work if we are only pushed the right way, but we are not, while the four hundred members present grinned with appreciation. The Chief Executive then launched into a discussion of the Capitol Park Extension proposition referring in complimentary terms to former Senator John E. Fox and the Board appointed by Governor Tener as being responsible for the purchase of the Park Extension at a cost of less than three million dollars.

fact that his residence in Philadelphia would not permit him to cast a vote for the loan. Throughout the Governor's remarks there was a strong undercurrent of optimism which was communicated to the big audience of public-spirited men now organized for the boosting of the city. His declaration that the Commonwealth was in sympathy with the city in the creation of a park system that would be a credit to both evoked much applause. He indicated clearly that the State will co-operate in every way in developing such a landscape treatment as will make it impossible for the visitor to tell where the State ends and the city begins with respect to the Harrisburg Park System. He indicated that the widening of the streets abutting on the Capitol grounds had been practically agreed upon and declared that the plan and assurance of a modern hotel, worthy the city, meant more for Harrisburg than many of its citizens now realize.

It was in discussing the educational needs of the city that the Governor was at his best. He described the importance of the proposed Junior High Schools and pointed out that under present conditions not more than sixty per cent. of the students were getting the benefit of the expensive equipment provided by the people. He closed with an eloquent appeal for proper educational facilities and said no preparation for defense was half so important as the proper education of the youth. It makes for real democracy and safeguards the future Harrisburg. The speaker's remarks were bright with humorous references and were punctuated by frequent and enthusiastic applause. Edwin S. Herman introduced the Governor.

Strongly Advocates School Loan. The Governor's enthusiastic support of the proposed High School Loan "to rehabilitate the school system" left no doubt in the minds of his hearers as to where he stands on that question. "Harrisburg is educationally sick, and when one is sick he does not call up a doctor to find out what it will cost to make him well; his main thought is to get well," was the appropriate analogy with which he summed up the arguments in favor of the loan. "Give every boy and girl in Harrisburg a square deal. Neglect will defeat the uplift of the city by impairing the training of the youth. Every man of you ought to be out and work for that loan. The future of America depends on the elimination of waste and that means training our youth to the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. Money is a mere bauble compared to the good that will be done to the city from passing the loan." The Governor deplored the fact that his residence in Philadelphia would not permit him to cast a vote for the loan.
