FEDERAL LEAGUE STARS FALL DOWN

Did Not Prove Big Help to Major Leagues; Ten Improve in Hitting

Pittsburgh, Oct. 30.—Dropping up major league teams with Federal League talent proved about as efficacious as stopping a run on a bank with a Confederate $10 note.

The averages to-day will show that of twenty of the most promising Federal stars retained in the major leagues this year, sixteen of them have fallen off an average of over 55 points per man in batting.

On the other hand, only four Federalers have gained. Of these two advanced significantly. Marsons improved because he was off form in the Federal League, having played in but few games in two years.

The hardest fall of all was that of Johnny Tobin, who was expected to be a sensation this season. Johnny was one of the few players developed in the Federal League. He went there little more than a semipro and flashed into prominence.

In the "big time show" he lost 90 points, or almost 33-1-3 per cent. of his Federal League.
