SULTAN OF EGYPT HAS GREAT HOPES

Believes Under British Protection Future of Country Is Assured

Alexandria, Egypt, Nov. 7.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—"I have great hopes for Egypt. Without hope no man's life would be worth living. So I am ever hopeful, and I believe that under the protection of England, the greatest of liberal powers, the future of Egypt is assured."

It was His Highness, Hussein Kamil, the new sultan of Egypt, speaking. The occasion was an audience granted to a representative of the Associated Press at Ras-el-Tin, the sultan's summer palace here. His Highness talked with the correspondent for nearly two hours and outlined his position freely, the keynote of his remarks being the sentiment quoted above.

The sultan is a man of magnetic personality and a charming conversationalist. Democratic in his ideas and he expresses pride in this fact because, he says the spirit of democracy is the foundation of Islamism, he is equally democratic in manner and speech throughout his life. He is 55 years of age, he has been a student of the world and has a profound knowledge of many subjects.

Satisfied With Progress

His Highness expressed satisfaction with the progress made thus far as regards the change in ideas and sentiments of the people since his accession. He said there had been great support in the establishment of moral support here, and he added that there was an ever growing feeling of confidence in Great Britain.

"When I was asked to assume the position of sultan, I declined at first," continued His Highness. "The situation then was a complicated and difficult one, and I have no personal ambitions. After careful reflection, I decided that I could do Egypt a service by accepting, and that consequently it was my duty to undertake the responsibility for my country. Accordingly I cast my lot with Great Britain. I have shaken hands with the British; I have pledged my faith, and I shall carry my agreement to a finish, understanding well that it is in the interest of my country."

Admires United States

His Highness here spoke feelingly of the people of the United States. "I have great admiration for America," he said. "I admire American pluck, initiative and love of country. Americans have the welfare of their nation at heart, which is as it should be. I have been greatly pleased while in Paris to see Americans in uniform proudly wearing badges made of the Stars and Stripes. I believe that even these tiny folk knew the feeling of patriotism and that this is typical of your great republic. And you are advancing. I have watched with great interest the progress of America in world affairs, beginning with the presidency of Mr. Roosevelt. I believe that you will become more and more a factor in international affairs."

Speaking of the attitude of the Egyptian people to the protectorate at the outset, His Highness admitted that there had been some hostility and stated that this was due primarily to so-called, religious reasons, the mixing up of politics and religion.

Believes in Education

"Such feelings of resentment as there may have been," said the sultan, "was among that class of people whose religious conceptions had been rendered faulty and who had arrived at a certain stage of enlightenment foreign to Islamism, which Germany and other powers had exploited in their own interests."

Hussein Kamil is a great believer in education as a means of establishing good government and prosperity. One of his most striking declarations was that he was an earnest advocate of education for Egyptian women. He professed deep admiration for American women and said he had noticed that in the past few years there had been decided advances made by them in securing an education which embraced not only American but European learning and polish.

In closing the audience, the sultan again turned his thoughts toward America. "I cannot let you go," he said, without some reference to the American army officers who labored so unselfishly with me, while I was minister of war under the reign of my father, in the reconstruction of the Egyptian army. I would mention particularly General Stone, Colonel Chaille-Long, Colonel Mason and Colonel Purdy. To these men I am deeply grateful."

His Highness had reference to General Charles P. Stone (Pasha); Colonel Chaille-Long, Colonel Alexander Malcolm Mason (Bey), and Colonel James Purdy (Pasha), who with a number of other American army officers came to Egypt shortly after the Civil War and were appointed to assist in the reorganization of the Egyptian army under the present sultan's father, Ismail Pasha, who was then ruler. General Stone was made chief of staff of the army.

Wilson Is Cheered by Princeton Students as He Casts His Ballot

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 7.—President Wilson voted here to-day, casting his ballot shortly after 9 o'clock. He motored over from Shadow Lawn which he left soon after 7 o'clock.

The President cast the fifth ballot in his precinct. He voted in the old fire enginehouse where from the time he became connected with Princeton University he has many times before recorded his choice on election day.

Because of the length of the ballot it took Mr. Wilson several minutes to mark it. In addition to voting in the Presidential election he marked his ballot for the State officers.

The President was accompanied by Mrs. Wilson and when they arrived they were greeted by a demonstration by Princeton students and professors. At the entrance of the Princeton President's coming and as his automobile drove up the drummer beat a tattoo. Almost instantly students appeared from every direction. They swarmed over the campus and rushed toward the voting place as Mr. Wilson alighted from his automobile. The Princeton yell went up with a resounding "Wilson, Wilson, Wilson," at the entrance.

When the President emerged the students again cheered him and called "speech, speech," but the President only shook his head and smiled. He greeted several in the crowd by name. The President started back for Long Branch immediately, leaving at 9:30. He planned to spend the remainder of the day playing golf. He will receive the returns by telephone from Secretary Tammity to-night.

WHY THE INCUBATOR PAYS

Hatching eggs by incubator is far better than the old natural way because a larger number of the chicks survive. Instead of being left to the care of the mother hen and becoming the prey of insects and exposed to weather changes, they can be cared for in the brooder, properly fed and protected from insects, rats and cats; therefore, the nonsetting variety of chicken is the best. She has her mind too firmly set upon the production of eggs to care about reproducing herself and looting around with a brood of little ones. Perhaps she thinks (?) that in this day of incubators an industrious hen is only wasting her time sitting on a nest for three weeks. There is nothing in the family raising game for such a biddy, but eggs. That is her regular business.—Farm Life.

DYE-MAKING PROCESSES

In some plants the process starts from an intermediate product, such as anilin oil, or from a crude base, such as naphthalene or benzol. In all cases the heavy acids are purchased, and the products are the simpler ones which have large bulk sales. The cost is, of course, much greater if the cost per ton of finished dye is desired. Generally this involves not only the process for the mixture of intermediates, but the recovery processes for re-utilization of the materials used.—P. R. Moses, in The Engineering Magazine for October.

BEES BELIEVE IN EFFICIENCY

Farm and Fireside, the national farm paper, says: "The ant takes rank over the honey-bee in Scriptural commendation as a hustler, but the modern specialized bee directs his activities into commercial channels in a way that leaves the ant way behind. Prof. M. E. Waite, Uncle Sam's bee chief, covered 2,586 apple flowers with gauze netting before they unfolded, and secured only three apples from the experiment. Other apple blossoms, on which bees worked unhindered, set a normal quantity of fruit."

ICE CREAM TO GO UP

The increased cost of milk, cream and sugar, the three most important ingredients of ice cream, will cause the frozen delicacy to take a soar in price. The new regulations of the State Health Department are also given as a reason for the increase. Local ice cream manufacturers say that the price will be increased to 35 cents a quart. Although there has not been any concerted action among the manufacturers there seems no doubt that the raise will come very soon in the future, one dealer having named the fifteenth of the month as the date when the new prices will take effect.

HEAVY VOTE IN CALIFORNIA

San Francisco, Nov. 7.—Cold weather prevailed in virtually all parts of California to-day. Indications were the voting would be heavy, chief interest being shown in two prohibition amendments, the presidential election and a contest for the United States senatorship.

MICH. VOTING ON PROHIBITION

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 7.—Weather conditions were perfect this forenoon for a heavy vote in Detroit. The contest for State-wide prohibition and the opposing amendment providing for home rule and a bitter battle for mayor attracted much more local interest than did the presidential fight.
