

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

"THEIR MARRIED LIFE"

Copyright by International News Service

Helen sat across the aisle in a section already made up and watched the flying landscape with heavy eyes and a far heavier heart.

"Are you ready for breakfast?" he asked simply.

Helen did not answer, she simply rose and followed him in. She had made up her mind not to ask him anything.

"The diner was flooded with sunlight, and the smiling official pulled out the chair at the table they had occupied the night before.

"I suppose I acted queer last night," he began, "it was kind of him to confess a part in the wrong, but Helen said nothing to help him, she was too miserably hurt.

"The Reason Why Helen looked up in amazement.

"Virginia Evans," she repeated, "why I thought she was blond."

"She used to be," Warren returned bluntly, "but black hair seems to be more fashionable of late."

"I met the man she is traveling with out in the smoker," Warren continued, "and he told me that the girl wanted to speak to me, so I went out to the observation platform to see her. She asked me if you were my wife, and if you knew about her. Of course I told her you didn't, and then she said she would like to meet you. Of course I saw her game right away, and I refused, whereupon she began to act sarcastic."

"Who was the man?" Helen asked quietly. "The man married to him?"

"No, of course not, he's her vaudeville partner and they are booked for a tour through the West. You didn't know she's gone on the stage, did you? Neither did I."

"Helen said nothing and Warren went on. The fellow is rather a decent sort, and he suggested a drink when he saw that the girl was going to make it unpleasant. The upshot of it was that I drank with them out there until it was too late for the girl to see you.

"The situation was almost more than she could bear, and most of all she hated to have her people meet them with so radical a difference between herself and Warren. For the first time in her life she didn't know what to do. Finally she turned to him with a visible effort.

"For the present Warren," she said evenly, "we'll drop the entire subject. Let's try to act as if nothing had happened while we are out here. There is nothing else to be done. I wouldn't have them know that anything like this has occurred between us for anything in the world. If you can act a little bit for the time being, I can, and afterward, perhaps, we can think of a way out."

Helen's speech left Warren too surprised to answer. Sometimes he imagined he had discovered new things about Helen of late. He did not stop to realize that while a woman may go on loving a man, each act of weakness directed against her robs her love of an element of respect.
