

GLUCK EXCELS IN QUIETER MOODS

Her Artlessness and Winsome Grace Charm Vast Audience That Hears Her

(By John W. Phillips)

There is no law or set of laws that will change human nature. Man will control or subdue through fear, but it will not touch the mainspring that produces a new being, with a better and nobler view of life. The way to fight with good. Music is one of the great forces for good. All so-called secular music should be judged, broadly speaking, by its capacity to stimulate moral growth and all sacred music should have in it the element of spiritual health.

Good music then, has in it the sustaining qualities for which mankind is constantly seeking. Our own Rocky Mountains or the Swiss Alps by their grandeur and immensity thrill and overpower both eye and mind. A sloping pasture, a few sheep, a quiet stream, with the attendant charms of a balm that heals and soothes.

In other words the bigger music suggests action or restlessness, while the quieter moods suggest rest and peace. In this category of music, Madam Alma Gluck excels, of all the sopranos heard in this city, none can approach her in the exquisite tone, quality and artistic finish displayed just now at the Chestnut Street Auditorium to a capacity audience. Her artlessness and winsome grace, together with a voice of pristine sweetness, even in quality and handled with authority and style will never be forgotten by the vast audience that heard her. Her voice is not big, but always charming and interesting. She likes to sing, and makes her audience like it too. Her delivery of melody is always firm and true, and polished with subtle nuances and velvety tone.

The program was of much interest for it contained some old and rare treasures not exhibited heretofore in this city. The opening air "O Serpina Peneserte, by Pergolesi, is worthy of any singer's study. This number was capably done, and it was very hard to believe the music is nearly 200 years old.

How good it was to hear again a Mozart creation, even if one of the smaller and less familiar ones; and wonder of wonder, a Beethoven song—a humorous one at that—but a right good song, very cleverly presented. "Amarilli, My Fair One," by Caccini, was a gem, noteworthy for her sustained singing and subtlety of effects. When one considers that Caccini lived in the sixteenth century, it brings to mind again the question—are we pursuing true paths in the creation of present-day music? The Caccini music is free of dissonance, of course; but it was pure, sweet, pleading and satisfying—Dissonance analyzed means restlessness, and the Lord knows the earth is full of restless people. In the last few years, dissonance has been looked upon as strength in music—this writer does not agree with that view—dissonance suggests physical strength rather than mental strength. There is a place for dissonance in music but the writers have not yet discovered it.

"The Lass with the Delicate Air," requires good vocalism although written in the eighteenth century. This opening group of old numbers was sung with rare intelligence, and with the distinctive atmosphere and style belonging to the two songs from Louise, "Ever Since the Day," is a difficult number, with big intervals in pitch and demanding sustained tones of many degrees of power—Mme Gluck gave it a very fine and finished reading. The Schubert "The Post," was very delightful, and the Schumann number, as interpreted by Madam Gluck was a model of poetic, legato singing—a high water mark, vocally—Debussey's songs are never easy or clearly understood. He seems to be a musical hermit, living apart from the rest of us mortals. However, the two songs presented were more sane and coherent than others we have heard. "Fantoche" will find favor with any audience. "The Song of India," by that great Russian, Rimsky-Korsakoff suggests that Russians do not talk—they sing, not allowed to—but how they do feel, and how they do express their feelings. The song suggests that India is a land of riches, of freedom and happiness—a land of promise to which the author is gazing with secret longing. And that "Spring Song" of Rubenstein—why don't we hear it oftener? It is a fine song and surely breathes the spirit of Spring. The group contained five favorites in English, all handled with exquisite tone and artistry. The singer was recalled time and time again, and added several encores, and did a program of number or two over. The secret of Mme. Gluck's success is that she is a warm-hearted human being. She radiates good cheer and friendship, and sincerely enjoys giving happiness to others.

Anton Hoff, at the piano, won very warm approval for exceedingly well-played, sympathetic accompaniments. He has a very fine sense of proportion and phrasing and caught the moods of the songs in a way that blended perfectly with the singer's art. The concert was a musical triumph for Mr. Hoff, who is making every effort to kindle real musical enthusiasm in Harrisburg.

SURVEY OF LINE WILL BE MADE

Engineers to Start Tuesday to Settle Rush-East Hanover Dispute

Survey of the mountain land in the northern end of East Hanover township will be started Tuesday by an engineering corps selected for the purpose by the commission recently appointed by the Dauphin county court to settle the boundary dispute. The engineers will begin along the shore of the Susquehanna above Dauphin and extend the chains across to the crest of "Second mountain," thence eastward to the county line and then south again to a point directly opposite to where the work was begun. The section upon which the line is to be fixed includes some 4,000 acres of coal land which Rush township wants to include within its own boundaries in order to take advantage of the tax assessments. East Hanover township contends the section has always been a part of its territory and for several months the commission appointed to settle the dispute have been burrowing in dusty old books, maps and files. The commission will report to court in January.

sinking fund commissioners put in a busy hour or two this afternoon—clipping coupons. The "clips" representing semi-annual interest that Harrisburg has to cash on $170,000 of bonds now held in the sinking funds. The clipped coupons totaled $6,800. Mayor E. S. Meals, Commissioner W. L. Gorgas and City Treasurer H. F. Oves clipped the bonds.

WORK ON INTERIOR OF POST OFFICE BUILDING
Superintendents of construction for H. L. Brown and Company, New York, are planning their work for the winter on the addition to the Post Office Building. Nearly all of the heavy stone to be used in the exterior work have been placed and the men are now busy on interior finishing. In the old building which is being remodeled, marble is being placed along the sides of the walls and other finishing has been started. Within the next two weeks arrangements will be completed for rushing other interior work. The present contractors are making every effort to have the building finished in contract time.
