

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

A GIRL AND A MAN

A New and Vital Romance of City Life
by Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER I

(Copyright, 1916, Star Company)
"Good evening, Miss Morley!"
"Hasbrook Bainbridge's greeting was spoken in a subdued tone befitting the hour of illness. He merely nodded to Philip Hale.
"I am afraid my coming is inopportune," he suggested.
"—I will light the gas at once."
"Not on my account, I pray, Bainbridge said stiffly. "That is unless you prefer to do so."
As if in reply, Philip struck a match on the heel of his shoe, and lighted the three burners in the chandelier above the center table. The sudden glare made the trio blink, and before Agnes had recovered her self-possession Philip was saying good-night to her.
"I am glad to find that Miss Morley is resting quietly," he remarked, "and my calling at this time was an inconsiderate act on my part."
"Oh, no—it was kind of you to come," the girl strove to speak as naturally as he had done. "Good-night!"
Hasbrook Bainbridge stood motionless by the table until he had heard the floor close behind the young man, then he regarded the girl with a cynical smile.
"May I ask," he queried sarcastically, "why there must be all this illumination on my account? Does young Hale think it improper for you to receive me in the dark, as you received him?"
Agnes flushed crimson, even as she recalled gratefully that the room had possibly been too much in shadow for her present caller to see clearly the pair who had stood so close together at the time of his entrance.
"I forgot that the gas was unlighted," she tried to explain, her indignation making her speak sharply, "and Mr. Hale probably did not notice it either."
Bainbridge is indignant
"Until I arrived," Bainbridge supplemented. "But perhaps he is in a position to resent my talking to you except in a bright light?" Agnes demanded.
He gazed at her steadily, nothing her flashing eyes, and his manner changed. "Forgive me," he exclaimed. "You and I are such good friends that it pained me a bit to see that young jack-in-the-box act as if he had a proprietary right to you. It was almost, with a short laugh, "as if you and he were engaged. You are not, are you?"
"No!" the reply was so vehement that he knew it was sincere, yet at the back of his small eyes there lurked an ugly gleam. It may have been to keep the girl from seeing that he reached up and turned down two of the flaring gasjets before speaking again.
"I am taking the liberty of doing this, for the glare is unbearable," he remarked. "Now let us sit down, and I will explain my coming."
She sat down in silence, and he took a chair near hers. She had regained her self-possession, and remembered

DOTTED CHALLIS, RIBBON BINDING

Quaint Little Kimono For Child Most Useful While Waiting to Be Dressed

By MAY MANTON

9197 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Child's Kimono, 2 to 6 years.

This is really a fascinating little negligee. It is as simple and childlike as can be, it takes pretty and graceful lines and the little ones will wear it with infinite pleasure. It is a smart little garment and it has a certain quality of its own that is sure to make an appeal. It is very pretty made of the dotted challis illustrated with the ribbon bands but the suggestion found in the small front view, for cashmere with scalloped edges, must not be overlooked. Cashmere is charming for children's wear, it is of good weight for the kimono and the scallops are dainty and childlike and attractive, while at the same time they are in the height of style. Later, mothers will like to use the same model for French or Scotch flannel, or some warmer, cozier material that will make a kimono to be enjoyed on a frosty morning, while waiting for the bath.
For the 4 year size will be needed, 3 1/2 yards of material 27 inches wide, 2 yards 36 or 44, with 4 1/2 yards of ribbon 4 inches wide for the bands.
The pattern No. 9197 is cut in sizes from 2 to 6 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

tralian named Crawford. Crawford falls overboard, and as he has left Hopper's bag on deck, the missing man is identified as Hopper. Crawford has been on his way to England to claim an inheritance and Hopper almost has the money when Crawford turns up.

Sarah Bernhardt is once more in our midst—her welcome will be warm. All her life she has been an education and an inspiration for others. And in her old age she gives a marvelous example of genius unimpaired by the years, or by physical disaster. You see that age which controls others does not control genius. Every child is a genius, it has been well said, and every genius is a child. Sarah Bernhardt is to-day, in enthusiasm, still a child. Genius takes away from age its weakness and gives to its possessor youth in old age, as it gave the powers of maturity in youth. He who honors such a woman as Bernhardt honors himself. She has interpreted the works of genius, and doubled their value for another man, the great power of woman, which in every generation must be proved over again to the foolish.

To-night is the last opportunity you will have of witnessing the "all-girl" bill appearing at the Regent. Last Night For "All-Girl" Bill Majestic Theater. Lillian Fitzgerald, an eccentric comedienne, furnishes lots of comedy, while the music is supplied by June and Irene Melva, clever xylophone players. The three Darling Girls, in a very good trapeze act, together with two other acts of merit, complete the bill. The headline attraction for the first half of next week is another of those pleasing juvenile productions, entitled "Play and That is Composed of seven children, who are said to display unusual talent. Surrounding this attraction are: Burke and Harris, comedy singers; Percy Pollack and company, in a comedy variety turn; Billy Kinkaid, clever juggler, and one other act. To-night the theater box office will open at 6 o'clock and the first show begin at 8:30, and run continuously until 11 o'clock.

"A Vagabond Prince," the new Tri-angle picture that was presented at the Colonial Theater, yesterday, is not one of the usual tiresome foreign plays, but is staged on the "Barbary Coast" of San Francisco. It is filled with thrilling situations and tells how a titled young man comes to this country in search of romance and adventure. The picture, which will be seen for the last time to-day, is one beautiful scene after another, and tells a very pretty love story. Chas. Murray, the inimitable Keystone comedian, will be seen on the same program in a screening of his two-reel Keystone comedy called "Bombs." Monday and Tuesday, William Fox will present Virginia Pearson in a new powerful sixpart feature, "The War Bride's Secret." A play that gives this famous emotional actress a great role. The story of a girl who is secretly married just before her husband is called to war, and she is later forced to marry another man, whom she does not love. Wednesday, one day only, Douglas Fairbanks in "Manhattan Madness," which Jack Richardson has the principal role. Monday and Tuesday—Pauline Frederick, in a double role, "Ashes of Embers."

"The Hidden Scar," as its name suggests, deals with a wound. Not a wound thrust or a bullet, but a much deeper hurt. Wronged, when little more than a child, then with a child of her own to support, the wonderful struggle of a cabaret dancer to hold the position as a minister's wife which she has obtained.
Ethel Clayton and Holbrook Blinn are featured, and in this great play by far surpass any of their former efforts. Today also an all-Harrisburg play, "The Romance of Harrisburg," played by all local people. For Monday and Tuesday "The Daughter of the Gods," featuring the peerless Annette Kellermann, known the world over as the greatest woman swimmer and for acting before the camera.

If you laughed at Charlie Chaplin in "The Floor Walker," "The Pawn Shop" and other Chaplin releases, "Behind the Screen," now being shown at the Regent, will make you laugh too. There is something so funny and at the same time so pathetic about the bungling attempts of the little overworked Charlie to perform his duty, that the end of the picture leaves you with a variety of emotions. Every one who has ever longed to glimpse a motion picture in the making should not miss seeing "Behind the Screen," which will be shown for the last time to-day.
On the same program to-day is "The Gambler's Lost Love." How a wife's faith in her husband, a notorious gambler in a typical Western mining town, brings about his regeneration, is the theme of "The Gambler's Lost Love," in
