FOODS THEY BUILD OR DESTROY

AMAZING BUT RARELY SUSPECTED TRUTHS ABOUT THE THINGS YOU EAT

By ALFRED W. McCANN

The Experience of the Wisconsin Authorities, Actually Defted by the Proprietors of Dirty Creameries in Their Open Opposition to Butter Reform, Is Characteristic, Compromising, Fear, Selfishness and Standpatism Expressing Themselves Through Infected Butter, Are Maiming or Killing Thousands of Children.

Following the publication of the alarming facts connected with the manufacture of butter, which included a description of the betrayal of the butter industry by the dairy department of the University of Wisconsin in which the truth concerning pasteurization was publicly preached, whereas, in the classroom it was privately ignored, all the trade papers in the country devoted to creamery interests broke forth in defense of the butter makers based on a sweeping denial of every detail of the exposure.

Professor C. E. Lee and Dairy Commissioner George J. Wiegie had stated the truth to the legislators of Wisconsin at Madison, July 28, 1915. In the general hysteria that followed the exposure, the truth as outlined by these two authorities was dismissed.

Professor Lee, charging that the Wisconsin butter makers were disgracing the State, had said, "Gentlemen of the Senate, we have in this State a large number of sanitary creameries which are not in any manner affected as regards cleanliness by what I or anybody else may say about them. But we have a still larger number of creameries that don't know what sanitation is."

"We are still making one-sixth of all the creamery butter produced in the United States. But we are making butter and cheese which, if labeled as coming from the State of Wisconsin, would disgrace the State."

"Many of our creameries are as dirty as they dare be and others are just clean enough to do the law. We are sick of finding their operators $25 only to see them turn back the very next day to their dirty methods."

"We have hundreds of creameries here which should be condemned, but we have no power to condemn them. The dairy commissioner is absolutely at their mercy, as regards his ability to interfere with the rotten conditions against which we are here to complain."

"Under the present uncontrolled situation which now confronts us we cannot shut up a factory or a creamery no matter how rotten it may be. We have no law which empowers us to resort to such methods. For ten years we have been talking about enforcing dairy laws, but all our talk has been futile."

"Here stands a creamery owner who has dared to tell you that he will not submit to any interference in his twenty factories by any State official. This man has been arrested on numerous occasions for maintaining unsanitary conditions. On every occasion a jury of farmers, pronouncing him not guilty, has acquitted him, only to make a laughing stock of the authorities."

"It is because of dirty competition that we are now making a lower quality of dairy products than we ever made before."

Commissioner Wiegie, following Professor Lee, said: "The tuberculosis cow is not the only danger which confronts the butter eating public. Under our present uncontrolled conditions men who have tuberculosis in its worst stages are working in the creameries."

The names of dirty creameries were mentioned by the commissioner with such freedom of speech that little short of a panic ensued.

The opponents of the bill to license creamery products, which Commissioner Wiegie and Professor Lee were urging the Senate to pass, were on their feet constantly, with their lawyers, interrupting. The chamber was full of sulphur and brimstone.

The law makers, provoked by the very violence of the scene, were beginning to believe that all was not well.

When one of the creamery men, after declaring that the sanitary conditions of the State of Wisconsin were the finest in the world as far as cheese and butter factories were concerned, was asked if he knew the meaning of b. coli, shouted, "There is no such thing as b. coli," it became clear to the representatives of the people that they were dealing with prejudice and passion, not with facts.

It was following this tempestuous scene, of which I was an eye-witness, that the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin enacted a law for the licensing of cheese factories and creameries.

This law, however, affected only the outward cleanliness of the plants and did not in any manner, directly or indirectly, control the character of the cream, the health of the cows, the health of the workers, or the necessity of pasteurization.

"If the New York State authorities," commented Commissioner Wiegie, "had required pasteurized butter three years ago our butter makers would have given them such butter. They never will produce such butter until the law compels them to."

The New York authorities, declaring there would be a butter famine if they interfered, will never make such demands.

Here, then, is the unbridled gap that separates the people from pasteurized butter.

principal European countries and throughout the far east, particularly in India and Australia. The car has proven exceedingly popular in England and Ireland and the sales are holding up well, despite the slump occasioned by the duty imposed by Great Britain.

Dodge Brothers have not accepted war orders, and yet they have shipped many cars to all of the countries to which it is possible to ship motorcars.

CHOLERA DIMINISHING
The cholera epidemic has shown a gradual abatement in Tokio, so that the average number of cases reported daily is about one-seventh of that at the height of the epidemic. A member of the police medical department, however, said that the season has set in for the fishing of mackerel, pike and sardines, and that the epidemic is likely to break out afresh unless individuals continue to take precautions by not eating raw fish. An official dispatch to the Japanese Foreign Office says that the customs and consular officials at Yinkow have decided that Nagasaki is a cholera port. At Nagasaki the disease has greatly diminished.

Many Dodge Brothers Cars Are Exported

The question is often asked in motorcar circles as to whether Dodge Brothers have devoted much attention to export business.

While officials of the company maintain their usual reticence in discussing matters of policy, it is known that the company has had a very successful year in export lines and that Dodge Brothers' cars have won a popularity abroad that rivals the esteem in which it is held at home.

No figures are given out on the actual number shipped to foreign countries, but it is known that agencies have been established in the
