SEALER'S SAUERKRAUT PROBLEM SMELLS TO HIGH HEAVEN

When you purchase the modest sauerkraut should you not receive full measure, crushed solidly to the brim, rather than a meed of sprays sifted tenderly and delicately from the dispenser's fork like new hay from the mow? That's quite a problem and it's one by the way, that has City Sealer Harry D. Reel scratching his head in bewilderment. During the last several weeks a number of more or less indignant lovers of the dish that goes with side-pork and mashed potatoes, have complained bitterly of the miserliness of the sauerkraut dealer. The question is this: of late when negotiations for a quart of sauerkraut is completed, the money is paid over, and the eager buyer holds out his hand for the kraut, he sees the man behind the counter gaily stab a fork full of the byproduct of cabbage, delicately sprinkle it into the tin measure and so fill it up. In days of yore, the marketer soulfully recalled, one stood by with watering mouth and saw the tin measure stuffed and crammed to the top. "What's a man to do?" demanded Sealer's Reel stifferly. "What can I tell 'em? There's nothing in the State laws to determine whether kraut shall be bought and sold by a dry or liquid measure. It's a real one, in his sauerkraut problem. It smells, too, to high heaven."
