

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

A GIRL AND A MAN

A New and Vital Romance of City Life by Virginia Terhune Van Water

CHAPTER LXIX. (Copyright, 1916, Star Company.) Dinner in the little flat that night went off happily.

"It reminds me of the nice supper we had the night of the day you got your position with Hale & Bainbridge," the elderly woman remarked.

"Indeed it would!" Agnes agreed. Yet she was wondering how much she herself was trusting.

"Phil is coming to see you, dear. He asked if he might come. I told him I was sure you would be glad to see him."

"Yes, indeed—very glad," Miss Lucy answered. "He is such a dear young man."

"No, Auntie," Agnes said sternly. "You are planning to get yourself out of the way for our sakes. You must not do that."

"Oh, no—really, dear. I think I would be more comfortable in my own room," the invalid insisted.

"This is come about that, after she had greeted Phil, Agnes led him toward Miss Lucy's room, but at the door he checked her."

"Darling," he said, "I am going in to see your aunt, but I want you to stay here in the living room."

"Some one to see me!" Agnes exclaimed. "What do you mean? Who is it?"

"Some one with good news," he told her tenderly. "Agnes, darling, kiss me once more, for I am very happy."

Then he released her and slipped into Miss Lucy's room, closing the door behind him as William Hale entered the living room.

Without a word, Phillip's father came to Agnes and held out both hands. "My dear," he said simply.

"Until what?" The man's voice was stern and he looked at her with an intensity that made her answer frankly.

"Not until Phil has done what you demanded of him. Not until he is able to support himself—and me. Not until—with a proud lifting of the head—he and I have proved that his marriage will not be his undoing."

William Hale laid his hand on her shoulder. "My dear," he said, "you have been the making of Phillip—not the undoing. His mother and I both know that now—though I acknowledge with shame that we were blind at first."

"Fifteen minutes later Agnes Morley went softly into her aunt's room. She found Phillip sitting by the invalid's bed, talking cheerfully, although a keen observer would have noticed that his manner was preoccupied."

He sprang to his feet as Agnes entered, and, going to her, put his arm about her. "Has he gone? Is it all right?" he whispered.

"What's the matter?" Miss Morley asked, looking at her niece's flushed cheeks. "Has anything happened?"

"Yes, Aunt Lucy, something has happened. Agnes is going to—"

But Agnes checked him by laying her hand over his lips. "Yes, Aunt," she said, as Phillip drew her to her aunt's side.

SHIRRED GIRDLE AND BIG POCKETS

Smart One-Piece Frocks For Young Girls Made of Soft Woolen Materials

By MAY MANTON

9146 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Girl's Dress, 8 to 14 years.

One-piece frocks are undoubtedly the smartest of the season for little girls, but this one is rendered somewhat unusual by the girdle formed of shirring. It is gathered at the upper edge and joined to the yoke.

For the 10 year size will be needed, 6 1/2 yards of material 27 inches wide, 4 1/2 yards 36, 4 yards 44 with 1 1/2 yard 36 inches wide for the collar and cuffs.

The May Manton pattern No. 9146 is cut in sizes from 8 to 14 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of fifteen cents.

Why They Call Him Garry; Starts Among Printers

Philadelphia, Dec. 19.—It's really August, and not Garry, that first name belonging to Mr. Hermann, chairman of the national commission, who successfully defended his title in a battle with Battling Barney Dreyfus, of Pittsburgh, last week in New York.

The pudgy Mr. Hermann told how he had the nickname tacked on to him. "I had just been made 'devil' in a printing place in Cincinnati," he explained.

"I was short, broad-shouldered and extremely green. The printers at once nick-named me Garibaldi. In time they shortened it to Garry. The name stuck all through my life, and to-day nine-tenths of my mail is addressed to Garry Hermann."

For everybody else, it seems to me, there is at least one day of rest—Sunday. The farmer's wife, however, works every day in the week—and works hard.

H. M. Brooks was elected vice-president of the Central Union, secretary-treasurer, and J. F. Ommert, trustee. Messrs. Brooks, Richards and Poulson were named as a press and organization committee. The next meeting of the Central will be January 15, at the rooms of the union.

New York, Dec. 19.—Thomas Cochran, president of the Liberty National Bank of this city, who came to New York virtually penniless sixteen years ago, will become a partner in the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., on January 1, it was announced to-day.

Cochran was born in St. Paul, Minn., March 20, 1871, his parents having moved to that city from New York State. At the age of twenty-four, Cochran came to New York City in search of fortune.

He earned a salary that the average man in Wall street to-day would consider small until he attracted the attention of Henry P. Davison, then vice-president of the First National Bank, and now a member of J. P. Morgan & Co.

2,000,000 SEED TREES AVAILABLE

Department of Forestry Will Distribute Pines, Spruce, Larch and Ash

The Department of Forestry announced to-day that 2,000,000 forest tree seedlings will be available for free distribution in the Spring of 1917.

The following species make up the number: White pine, 1,250,000; Scotch pine, 410,000; pitch pine, 200,000; Norway spruce, 55,000; European larch, 27,000; Japanese larch, 5,000; sugar maple, 5,000; white ash, 5,000.

These are the seedlings over and above those which will be planted on State forests. Anyone can secure an allotment of these trees if he will promise to use them for reforesting within the State of Pennsylvania.

No trees will be furnished for shade or ornamental planting, nor will any shipments be made in less than five hundred lots.

The trees are two and three years old, and from five to ten inches high. Shipments will begin from the big forest nurseries about April 1, but application for trees may be made at any time to the Commissioners of Forestry.

The only expense which applicants are asked to bear is a nominal charge for packing and shipping, which will average about twenty-five cents per thousand seedlings.

A bulletin giving detailed instructions on what, when and how to plant is now in the hands of the State Printer, and copies will be sent to anyone who makes request. In cases where it is practicable, the Department of Forestry men to supervise the planting operations.

Applications are coming in almost daily, and indications are that the demand in 1917 will far exceed last year's record. Almost 1,500,000 seedlings were planted by private individuals in 1916.

Farmer's Wife Tells Her Side of High Price of Turkey Controversy

Take it from "Only a Farmer's Wife," the Telegraph's best letter writer on the high cost of turkey problem, there are two sides to the tale; facetious suggestions to exchange an automobile for a national fowl elicited the letter. Here it is:

To the Editor of the Telegraph: "Dear Sir: When I noticed a recent piece in the paper about someone wishing to trade his auto for a turkey, I wondered if the city man with car ever thinks that which he and his family are enjoying themselves, what it cost the farmer's wife in grueling work and disappointment?"

How, at the approach of every thunder or rain storm, her duties are to gather the little fowls into a dry place; how she risks a thorough soaking in the rain to do it; how she must take care of the old ones from season to season—while corn is never less than 75 cents to $1 a bushel, and wheat is $1 to $1.60; how she must carefully scald the milk which is used to feed the young turkeys; how she must figure out the problem of efficiency and economy in feeding the small grain with prices at $3.20 per hundred weight; how, when the young turkeys are practically ready for market, the heart-breaking appearance of "black head" may turn a whole summer's work with a possible profit at the end into a loss; how sometimes, the ratio of death is as much as thirty to thirty-five out of forty. Now is that all?

Not so long ago an automobile loaded with six men stopped at the market where we were unloading our wagon. The men shrilly referred to the "robber farmer" and their profanity was something awful.

Upkeep of an automobile have been compared; but one cannot buy vegetables and hope, too. Produce is high, but the farmer has an argument against the same problem as the city man, so far as labor is concerned. Then, too, there is the increased cost of machinery and the increased cost of grinding the corn into meal.

Driving to market requires constant care in seeing that the horses are shod and that the wagon is kept in good shape. Bridges, toll, still rent, etc., figure in the cost. Dry spots are as scarce in number as rain drops in drought time.

In winter and Spring the roads are full of mud holes, although in summer and Fall the State roads are in pretty good shape.

Miss Fairfax Answers Queries BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX. NEITHER OF YOU IS ACTING HONORABLY. DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I have been going about with a young man for over a year, and I think a great deal of him. Another apparently respectable man, divorced and engaged to marry another girl, takes me out frequently in his auto, unknown to his betrothed. He has not told me and does not know that I am aware of his former marriage, but he insists that it is perfectly proper for me to go out with him because I am not engaged to anyone else, even though I expect to be soon. Do you think it proper for me to go out with him, and do you think his intentions honorable? ANXIOUS. The man's previous marriage has nothing to do with the case. Eliminate it, and it remains dishonorable for you to go on secret rides with the fiance of another girl. Even were you not ready to announce your engagement, it would be wrong of you—as well as of the man—to go off for these clandestine auto rides. But I cannot understand how a girl who claims to be in love with another man can so conduct herself. Use Telegraph Want Ads
