TEACH GIRLS MORE OF LIFE'S GRACES

Say Less of "Culture" and More of Simple, Beautiful Things

By DOROTHY DIX

While they are talking about vocational schools, don't you wish that somebody would start a school where they would teach a girl:

First—To read. Not to elucute. Not to recite "Lit-tle M-a-a-bie with Her P-a-a-ace Against the Windo-w P-a-a-ane" or "Curfew Shall Not Ring To-night," but to read intelligently, sympathetically, delightfully, in the refined, cultivated speaking voice that is the most beautiful music in the world.

The art of reading aloud has become a lost art, and not one person in a thousand can read even a paragraph from the daily paper without it being an affliction so great that it is not to be borne with patience. A Well Written Letter, With Words Spelled Correctly, Is A Mark of Ability.

Most of us are aware that neither we nor our friends know how to read, and so we would no more think of asking casual acquaintances to read aloud to us than we would ask for an air from grand opera. Yet there is no other accomplishment in the world more to be desired than the ability to read aloud.

Second—Where she would be taught to spell. There may be no credit, as has been said, in spelling well, but it is certainly disgraceful for a lady to spell badly.

Third—To write. The hallmark of a cultivated lady—the supreme test of savoir faire—is knowing how to write a charming letter and a graceful note. Half of the time when we send a little gift to a girl, or when some sorrow or joy comes to us, we are treated by her with unpardonable rudeness. No line of thanks, no word of congratulation or sympathy reaches us from her, and the reason of it is not that she is lacking in politeness or good feeling, but simply that she doesn't know how to write a letter. The time that girls spend in school composing laborious essays could be so much better employed if they were only taught how to write letters. No girl should be given a diploma unless she can satisfactorily prove that she has acquired the gentle art of writing the various notes demanded by the exigencies of civilized society.

Fourth—How to talk. The idea of teaching a girl how to talk may sound like carrying coals to Newcastle, but if I could only teach a girl one thing on earth I would have her acquire a conversational repertoire that would be sufficient to meet all of the ordinary emergencies of life.

Every Woman Should Learn to Speak And Behave With Natural Grace

A girl should be just as much ashamed of making a blunder in what she says to people as she would be of making a grammatical blunder in the way she says it. Yet to most of the girls were aptly described by the Irishman who said of a woman that she never opened her mouth without putting her foot in it.

A girl should be taught the art of gracious speech—how to be flatteringly deferential to old people, and sweet and gentle to children; how to pay a compliment delicately without wholesale laying on of flattery; and above all, how to receive a compliment with modest appreciation.

I have heard girls who, when any one made a nice speech to them, say brusquely and insultingly: "How much do you want for that?" a remark that should have sent them back to the kindergarten class in a feeble-minded institute, or else relegated them to the Home for Incurable Boors.

Fifth—How to be graceful in their deportment. For a man to clump into a room like a bull in a china shop is bad enough, but for a woman it is unforgivable. A woman who cannot walk without knocking things down, who cannot touch your bric-a-brac without smashing it, who does not handle old china as if it were a new-born babe, or touch fine books as if she loved them, is a monster.

A woman should be able to walk without making a noise, to move without jarring things, to sit without sprawling or wriggling, to be, in short, a joy to the senses instead of an irritation to the nerves, and if she isn't taught this, no matter what else she knows, her education is incomplete.

Sixth—How to dress. This doesn't mean to make her a fashion plate, one of the poor creatures whose brains are cut on the bias and shirred in the middle, but to teach her how to dress in ordinary, everyday sort of things so that she shall make the best of herself and the most of the money she has to spend. And the poorer the girl is the more she needs this branch of education.

The Eleventh Commandment For Women Is To Be As Pretty as They Can

It is a woman's religious duty to be as good looking as she can. When God made her a thing of grace, curves, when he gave her the glory of long hair, and painted the roses on her cheeks, He intended her to adorn life, and it is just as much her mission to do this as it is to do anything else.

Now it is true that not every woman can be beautiful, but no one need be hideously ugly if she will take the trouble to dress properly. The simplest frock may be chosen of a pretty color and made on lovely lines, the cheapest shirt-waist may be put on properly instead of hit-or-miss.

For the woman who is frowsy and untidy, for the woman whose skirts hike up in front and down in the back, whose hat and skirt miss connection, and the various colors of whose raiment swear at each other, no excuse can be made. She is an eyesore to man, a blot on the landscape, and she has frustrated the plan for which she was made.

The remedy for this is education, and it is far more important that a girl should be taught to have some sense of color, and value of lines, and given some knowledge of how to dress herself properly than it is that she should be given a smattering of theologies and isms.

In short, don't you wish you knew of some school to which you could send your daughter where she could be taught the accomplishment of being a lady? And isn't that about the highest education that you can give to any girl?
