"THEIR MARRIED LIFE"

Copyright by International News Service

"What are you doing?" Warren questioned harshly as he awoke in what he supposed was the middle of the night and saw a light in the hall. Helen did not answer for a moment, for the door was partly closed and she did not hear Warren clearly. Besides, she felt cross and irritable and half sick, and the very fact that Warren was questioning her right to be up annoyed her. Her throat was sore and her chest was congested, so that she could not breathe. She wondered if she were going to be sick, and as she snapped off the light she coughed heavily.

"Yes, I feel so strange on my chest, I can hardly breathe. Don't look like that, dear, it isn't anything dangerous, because I haven't any pain. What worries me is that I have no idea what time Nora will get here this morning, and I am anxious about your breakfast. It's Saturday, so Winifred won't have to go to school, but I told Nora not to get here early this morning, and that I would get breakfast." "Don't worry about anything," Warren said, springing out of bed. "The first thing is to send for a doctor." "No, Warren, please don't, not yet. Why, I couldn't see a doctor with everything at sixes and sevens like this?" "Don't be a fool," Warren said briskly, certain that he was doing the right thing. "I suppose if you were dying you wouldn't have the doctor before the room was picked up." Helen felt too ill to mind Warren's sarcasm, and she smiled a little. "But I'm not dying," she protested, "and I am going to get up and fix things if you telephone for a doctor, really I am." Warren paused in the act of hurrying out to the telephone, and Helen wondered if he were contemplating holding her in bed by force. He looked angry enough, and she did feel so miserable that, after all, nothing seemed to matter very much. At that moment there was a ring at the bell, and Warren turned to answer the door. Outside stood Nora, her fresh face wreathed in smiles. Helen heard her from the bedroom and sighed happily. Now that Nora was here everything would be all right. "Nora," she called weakly, "come in here, will you? How did you happen to come, after all?" "I don't know, ma'am," Nora responded, "I just felt good this morning, and so I had me own work done and I thought I might as well come right over. Are you sick, ma'am?" "I do feel dreadfully, Nora, and Mr. Curtis is telephoning for the doctor. If you will just get the room in order and then get his breakfast, everything will be fine. I have caught a bad cold."

SWINDLER WORKS HIS GAME TWICE

Successively Impersonates Two Different Men and Gets "Carfare Home"

Impersonating successively William Renn, of Sunbury and John Brown, of Phillipsburg, a man succeeded in swindling the price of a fare to both places, first from John Shindel, 930 Grand street, and then from the Associated Aids Societies. On the evening of December 17, a poorly dressed man, carrying a crutch knocked at Mr. Shindel's home, and asked for something to eat. Shindel urged him to have supper with the family, meanwhile searching his memory in an endeavor to place the face of the stranger that seemed strangely familiar. Finally he asked, "Aren't you William Renn, of Sunbury?" A moment only the stranger hesitated and then, evidently very much abashed, he shamefacedly answered, "Yes, I am Renn, but don't allow my people in Sunbury to discover that I am down and out." Shindel later bought the down-and-outer a ticket for Sunbury, where his parents live, but saw him in town two days later. Last Friday Shindel went to Sunbury and discovered the wayward son had not returned home. He told the story to a brother, John Renn, who came to Harrisburg to try to locate William whom he had believed to be in Cleveland, Ohio. Investigation proved that the real John Renn was not in Cleveland, and the man that impersonated him, had "put one over."

HOW MISS SUTTER SAVED HER HAIR WITH CUTICURA

"I was troubled with dandruff and burning and itching of my head. My scalp was very sore so that I could not touch it, and the itching was so terrible I could not sleep, and I irritated my scalp by scratching. My hair was thin, lifeless and dry and came out in handfuls. I was afraid of combing it, and when I did my clothing was white with dandruff which fell like snow. I was ashamed to go out. I had the trouble three or four years. Then Cuticura Soap and Ointment were recommended to me. After the second application I felt much better, and in two or three weeks I lost the burning and itching and my hair stopped coming out. I was healed." (Signed) Miss A. Sutter, 809 Frank St., McKees Rocks, Pa., April 10, 1916. The majority of skin and scalp troubles might be prevented by using Cuticura Soap, and no other, for all toilet purposes. On the slightest signs of redness, roughness, pimples, rashes or dandruff, apply a little Cuticura Ointment. Nothing purer, sweeter or more effective than these fragrant emollients for toilet and nursery purposes. Sample Each Free by Mail With 32-p. Skin Book on request. Address post-card: "Cuticura, Dept. H, Boston." Sold throughout the world.

174 Deer and 15 Bears Killed in Center County

Bellefonte, Pa., Dec. 27.—A virtually complete compilation of the deer and bear killed in Center county during the last season has been made, and it figures up just 174 deer and 15 bears, but to this must be added about a dozen deer and several bear that were killed by hunters and gotten out of the woods before the game warden could obtain their names and residences.

Only one accident occurred in the county during the season, and that was to A. R. Sholter, of Dauphin, who stumbled over some rocks while hunting the Seven Mountains and got a bullet wound through his right hand.

"CRIPPLES" ABLE TO WALK

Just a little time to think over their infirmities yesterday behind the police desk convinced three panhandlers that they weren't really "cripples." For several days slightly crippled panhandlers by begging have been trying to capitalize the Christmas spirit of the holiday crowds. Yesterday three were picked up, but when they were hustled rather hurriedly from the police wagon discovered that they could walk very well without the aid of their canes.

"DETECTIVE" HELD

Five separate charges were entered against Elmer Jones, the volunteer "detective" at the hearing before Alderman Hoover last night. Jones had appointed himself a private detective. Armed with a tin badge and revolver he was arrested in the passenger depot on Thursday night while pursuing a warm trail under the benches with a flashlight. In default of $300 bail he was sent to jail to await court trial.

Express Train Hits Electric Truck at Depot

Unable to decide whether to go forward or backward in the path of the Keystone Express almost proved fatal for a young manipulator of one of the new electric trucks at the Pennsylvania depot this morning. He attempted to cross the tracks before he noticed the express bearing down upon him. A momentary indecision proved very destructive to the truck that was hurled a distance of thirty feet by the engine. The driver of the truck, not being a sea captain under focus of a movie machine decided not to stick to the ship, thus saving his life.
