FORCE IS ONLY PEACE INSURANCE

minister opening up on Germany as the cause of the war and a vehement declaration that so long as the present method of government and present Kaiser continue in power, no lasting good towards international peace can be accomplished. "The people of Germany have been misled," said he, "and peace will not be placed on a firm basis until the people of Germany have pulled down their Kaiser from his throne."
The names of Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg, of Germany, Sir Arthur Balfour, former Premier of England, and Sir Edward Grey, all of England, as well as the French premier, were mentioned by the speaker as names of those who have already committed themselves to the aims and purposes of the League to Enforce Peace.
Explains Aims of Peace League
Mr. Marburg's address was one which explained completely the aim and intent of the proposed League to Enforce Peace, and his opening statement was one favoring a world court. Ex-Minister Marburg, went on to answer attacks from two opposite schools. One which opposes the use of force, and one which favors its use, but is inclined to ignore any attempt to introduce reason and organization into international affairs.
"The first group thinks a world court all sufficient," the ex-minister continued. "It trusts to public opinion not only to compel nations to postpone fighting until there has been a resort to the court; but likewise to compel nations to observe the judgment."
The League to Enforce Peace believes in a world court," he declared. "Witness the very first plank of its platform. It believes that a court composed of judges by profession and leaning on precedent will, in the first place, build up the sanest and most enduring kind of law, namely, judgment. It is conscious of the fact that it was in this way that the English common law was evolved and wants this process applied internationally. It believes, further, that the very existence of the court will invite the codification of certain spheres of international law just as the Hague convention providing for an International Code of Prize produced the London convention which aimed to codify the law of prize. It believes that every time a question is removed from the area of politics to that of law the peace of the world is made more secure. But it does not believe that the existence of the court is alone sufficient to discourage such outrageous assaults on the peace of the world as the present great war.
"For that, something more is needed. Just as, within the State, we find back of the law the sheriff and finally the whole military force of the State and nation, so, eventually, in order effectively to prevent war, the whole military force of the society of nations must be put back of the accepted rules of international practice and of international morality. However, the league has stated frequently that in its belief, this ideal cannot be realized at once, that we must be content simply with a step in this direction and for the present stop short of enforcing the judgment or award of the tribunal."
"It proposes to begin with one thing, namely, compulsory inquiry before nations are allowed to fight. It feels that not only the world but the people of the countries which are about to take up arms have a right to know what the struggle is about. Certainly that is a reasonable demand and a reasonable demand, especially after the inquiry, the disputants will be free to go to war as under present conditions without suffering any penalties at the hands of the tribunal."
Admit Some War Do Good
"The extreme advocates of force maintain that some wars are righteous wars and that, in the past, wars of this kind have served great ends. We admit that but we meet it with a twofold answer: (1) That the aims attained by these righteous wars of the past are possible of attainment by better international organization without war; (2) That, should the wrongs be so grievous as to justify resort to war and should the inquiry which we insist upon fail at the same time to bring about a discontinuance of the wrongs, the righteous war may still be undertaken without penalty at the hands of the league."
These same worshippers of force express the fear that, during such an investigation, which may continue for months, the objectionable practice might be followed and irreparable injury done. The answer to this is that, just as in municipal law, we find lodged in the courts the power to forbid, by injunction, the continuance of objectionable acts pending the inquiry, so there will be vested in the league this same power of injunction to force the offending nation to suspend its pernicious activities, pending the inquiry, under penalty of immediate war at the hands of the league. The worshippers of force who oppose a program so fair as this either have not taken the trouble to investigate the plan or are advocates of international anarchy."
Favor Preparedness
"This same group likewise charges the league with opposing adequate preparedness. That charge is equally unfair and untrue. The league has said, through its executive committee, that efficient preparation for adequate national defense is in no way inconsistent with the purpose of the league but on the contrary is essential. Abatement of armaments is not likely to be brought about through international agreement. It will probably come only through disuse, that is, when a better international organization shall have shown, in the course of time, that heavy armaments are no longer needed. The formation of the league cannot produce this result immediately for several reasons. In the first place, in order to avoid all appearance of aggression, the league is planned to operate only on its own national field. The answer to this is that the league is not planning compulsory inquiry. Surely the latter has proved not only fair but of the highest use in industrial disputes.
"The league will have no power to force a nation into court. Nations will be free to go on with their disputes indefinitely, just as we continued our fisheries disputes with England for three-quarters of a century. But if any one of the disputants should attempt to begin a war over the question at issue before submitting it to inquiry, the league will forthwith employ its military forces to discipline it."
"It will appear that the present program of the league does not go so far as to aim at insuring justice. The first essential is to discourage war. And the making of war without a previous inquiry is the only act which the league will itself go to war over."
"Opponents of the league complain of the present carnage, its awful injustice and inhumanity, its violations of international law, and the staggering war debts being piled up, yet they oppose the employment of human reason, through adequate organization, to prevent the recurrence of such disasters."
INSTALL OFFICERS
Mount Vernon council, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, just evening installed new officers. Mrs. Forsythe, who acted as depluy was presented with a pin by the council.
