It is regrettable true," he asserted, "that there are capitalists who regard labor as their legitimate prey, from whom they are justified in getting all they can for as little as may be. It is also true that the part of labor there has been a growing feeling that it was justified in wresting everything possible from capital. So these two great forces have come too often to think that their interests are antagonistic and have worked against each other, each alone seeking to promote its own selfish ends.
