

WOMEN---THEIR INTERESTS AND PROBLEMS

The Fortunes of Emily
By HAL COFFMAN

Emily Takes Dictation Cheerfully.

CHAPTER III.
Emily takes dictation cheerfully. As Emily came out of old Mr. Grimshaw's office the rest of the clerks and stenographers expected at least to see her in tears, for they all knew what a cranky old bear he was and no one but Forbes, the head stenographer, had been able to take his dictation before.

Emily went to her typewriter as if nothing out of the ordinary had happened. She had the letters neatly finished in a very short time and ready for her employer to sign.

The following day, when his buzzer rang, Forbes answered it, but presently came out of the office again scowling, and, going over to Emily's desk, told her "the old man" wanted to see her. He did not say it in a very nice way, either.

The Honeymoon House

By Hazel Dale

Janet and Jarvis, With the World Before Them, Start on Their Wedding Trip.

Janet was not practical at all. In fact he was in a way far less practical than Janet. He cared not at all for the little things, yet while he possessed all the ideals and illusions of the dreamer, he had seen life and knew it by heart. Janet was in love with life, and she was curious, but she had by heart that divine knowledge a woman has, the instinct for building a home.

"Not at all the home that people generally live in," she said when talking about her ideals to Jarvis, before they were married. "Honey, I'm not in with domestic affairs and trifles, but a big true ideal that we can build about, and I want to be as free as air."

Janet had treasured in her heart for a long time her ideal of independence and she had tested it out before marriage when Jarvis had brought her a check for fifty dollars. In her secret soul she knew that until she herself was married her mother would never consent to her assertion of independence, but Jarvis understood. Janet wanted to be more than a wife, she wanted to be a kindred spirit, and a comrade, as well, and so she had balked at a honeymoon.

"Let's just slip off somewhere, where people can't find us, and house-joint in our spare moments," Janet had suggested to Jarvis. Honey-moons are too apt to be filled with honey-moods, and unless we are going to begin just as we intend to go on, what's the use?"

An hour had left it to Jarvis, and when Mrs. Carew asked where they were going Janet laughed and said she didn't know. She trusted Jarvis because she knew him. Hadn't Jarvis worked his way up in a city where competition was stiff?

Hadn't Jarvis lived in a dingy half bedroom with not enough to eat half the time? Janet had been to his school of experience, Janet even imagined that he must have known women rather well, before he had married and loved her. All artists know women; they couldn't help themselves.

"I feel like an enchanted fairy princess," Janet said in her slow, delicious manner, as the taxi drew up outside of the station and Jarvis held her out. "Where are we going, Jarvis? You can tell me now?"

"Down with a little beauty town in Long Island. I thought it would be great not to plan things at all, Mrs. More."

"And Jarvis," she continued, "I'm going to have my cards engraved just Janet Carew More, no Mrs. at all; do you know why? Because I am going to be a business woman. I am going to be traditional."

She sat back in the car seat and met Jarvis' quizzical eyes, her own merry.

"I want to make money; I want to have a big interest apart from you. I want to bring my own efforts into the Honeymoon House, wherever it is, and so I've decided not to be a bit traditional."

Janet regarded him tenderly. "What would you rather have me be, Jarvis, if you had your choice?"

"Independence, of course," Jarvis returned promptly. "And I think it's a great idea about the cards, and I want you to always do what you want to do first, not what I want you to do. But I don't want that first of all, you will be my mate." Jarvis' eyes darkened a little as he spoke and when Janet answered her voice was a little breathless.

"That's just why I married you," she said softly, "to be your mate. I could have done everything else if I had stayed Janet Carew."

"And that's the best mean much to me if you don't give them willingly," Jarvis went on, "so I want you to be free."

"And I won't be treated like a woman," Janet went on. "I want you to treat me as you would another man, about business matters and things of that kind. Because I warn you, Jarvis, I am going to make money."

"Oh, we are here?" Janet queried, eagerly peering out of the dark window. All she could see was a lot of waving trees and she stopped off the train a few raindrops blew into her face. And Janet was very much a woman as they drew off in the dark of station track, her head on Jarvis' shoulder and her eyes closed. They were together and Jarvis understood.

We Thank You!

Since the "Cut-Over" from the out-of-date, inefficient manual to the ultra-modern Automatic Telephone system, we have been receiving contracts at the rate of from 35 to 50 a day.

Like many other business concerns, through inability to get materials fast enough to fill inpouring orders, we have been held up with the installation of many telephones.

By straining every effort—and by a stroke of exceptional good luck—we have been able to get needed equipment rushed to us far ahead of our turn from the Automatic Electric Company factory in Chicago. We are now prepared to install telephones as fast as human energy can do the work.

You have been very patient with the delay made necessary by lack of materials, and we wish to take this means of publicly thanking you.

It may interest you to know that 1879 new subscribers are now awaiting the installation of

Complaints About Coal

We are not perfect. Accidents sometimes occur by reason of which some coal might get into your cellar different from what you ordered. Mistakes sometimes happen in the best of regulated business. We assure we take every precaution to keep the number of our mistakes down to a minimum, although we cannot get to a point where we can say we make none. Should you have a complaint to make about our coal or the way the delivery was made, please tell us all about it. We will do our best to fix it up with you. You can derive more satisfaction in five minutes, by reporting the complaint direct to our office than you can in a half day's conversation with your neighbor about your wrongs. We want to know when you are displeased—don't forget to tell us promptly.

Advice To The Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax.
Work Might Save You.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am deeply in love with my first cousin, who I know returns this love. Though we have exerted every effort to forget one another, we find it impossible. Our families have discussed the matter frankly and think it best not to marry, for not alone is he a first cousin on one side of the house, but also distant related on the other. Now, business makes it imperative for my parents to move to a small town, a great distance from New York, where all my friends and interests are, and my cousin has his business in this same town. I know I cannot find any interest or friends in this place, as it is an extremely small town, and the close contact that I am bound to be thrown in with my cousin will breed our resolution and will cement our love more.

Is there any advice or comfort you can offer me through your column?

DISCONSOLATE.

No true friend of the race advocates the marriage of cousins. It is unfortunate that you must move to the town where your cousin lives. You must find work of some interest to take your mind off this love, which it would be best for you to tear out of your life. You cannot determine in advance that you will find no congenial friends in his town—but if you do not, you must work out your own salvation, and a close application to work offers your best chance.

There Are Many Kinds of Love.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 29 and have been a widower for two years. I have met a young girl whom I like very much and feel that she will make a good wife, but cannot say that I love her as I did my wife. I am anxious to settle down and would like to ask if you think it advisable for me to marry this girl under the circumstances. Is there a possible chance that I might meet a girl whom I can fall in love with, or is there only one true love for anyone? B. B.

There are many kinds of love and the heart that has been bereaved is not doomed to eternal loneliness by any means. Of course it is possible that you will care again—but not at all probable that you will care in the same way. Don't do any girl the injustice of marrying her for the selfish reason that you think "she will make you a good wife." What kind of a husband do you think you will make?

Bond Corner Plot Is Seen in New Farm Loans

Washington, Jan. 15.—A circular alleged to have been sent by the National Surety Company, of New York, to all its agents, suggesting that they could secure the position of secretary-treasurer of farm loan associations to be organized to obtain loans from Federal farm loan banks and thereby "surely control all the bonding business" has been made public by the Federal Farm Loan Board with a reply thereto by George W. Norris, of the board, to W. B. Joyce, president of the company.

In his reply, Mr. Norris characterized the circular as "a serious appeal to the cupidity" of its recipients amounting to "an attempt to prostitute the act to purposes of personal gain" and expressed the hope that Mr. Joyce will disown it.

Charges Against New York District Attorney Filed With Governor

Spencer, president of the organization. The Governor is requested to order an investigation, and, if the allegations are sustained, to remove the district attorney. "The City Club's charges are similar to those preferred against Mr. Swann by former Judge James A. Wife to Blame if Husband Drinks, Says Druggist Brown of Cleveland, Who Tells Wife What To Do

A New Treatment Given Without the Consent or Knowledge of the Drinker

Cleveland, O.—No wife has a right to blame her husband because he drinks, says Druggist Brown of Cleveland. It is her fault if she lets him drink and bring unhappiness and poverty to her home and she has no right to complain. A woman can stop a drinking husband in a few weeks for half what he would spend on liquor, so why waste sympathy on a wife who refuses to do it? Druggist Brown also says the right time to stop the drink habit is at its beginning unless you want drink to deaden the fine sensibilities of the husband you love. Begin with the first whiff of liquor on his breath but do not despair if he has gone from bad to worse until he is rum-soaked through and through. Druggist Brown knows the curse of strong drink because he himself has been a victim. He was rescued from the brink of a drunkard's grave by a loving sister who, after ten years' time, revealed the secret to him. She saved him from drink—rescued him from his own depraved self, by giving him a secret remedy, the formula of an old German chemist, to disburse his debt to her and to help other victims out of the murky mire he has made the formula public. Any druggist can put it in the hands of any suffering wife, mother, sister or daughter. Just ask the druggist for prepared Tescum powders and drop a powder twice a day in tea, coffee, milk or any other drink. Soon liquor does not taste the same, the craving for it disappears and lo, one more drinker is saved and knows not when or why he lost the taste for drink.

Note—Tescum, referred to above, should be used only when it is desirable to destroy all taste for alcoholic drinks of every kind. The wife who approves of drinking in moderation and believes her husband safe should give it only when she sees, as most do in time, that the danger line is near. Since this formula has been made public H. C. Kennedy, J. Nelson Clark, and other druggists have filled it repeatedly.
