STANDING UP AND FOLLOWING AFTER

International Sunday School Lesson on "First Disciples"

(By William T. Ellis.)) Six men sat in council upon a grave international question. The issues of the little gathering might be—indeed, proved to be—portentous, for a call proved to be—portentous, for a call to the Christian manhood of the country was in contemplation. The six men all expressed themselves as in explicit and complete agreement. When it came to signing the document that had been agreed upon, one man, an eminent ecclesiastic, said he would like one night more for consideration. The next morning he sent work that he would not sign. He was afraid to stand up and be counted. He vigorously expressed convictions of the day before could not weigh against expediency. All his life he had sought to be on the side of the majority vote. Therefore, in one of the great testing times, he could not forsake all and follow his gleam. Then, to crown all, the tragedy was turned into a comedy by the later developments, for the ecclesiastical politician had guessed wrong, and the big crowd proved to be on the side of the statement he had been afraid to sign!

Incidents of this sort are enacted every day and every hour. Miriads are constantly in the valley of decision.

are constantly in the valley of decision.

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide, In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side; Some great cause, God's new Messiah offering each the bloom or blight, Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right; And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.' Daring to Decide

In matters moral and spiritual, there can be no neutrals. Once a great question of right and duty is faced it must be answered. Any attempt to evade it is in itself an answer. Never was the world so full of challenges to decision as now. Opportunely, this Sunday School lesson upon decision comes to fortify the souls of youth; for it is youth that has the courage to make great decisions, and to leave all and follow a new allegiance. The radiance of the courage and loyalty and self-abnegation of the millions of soldiers in Europe, who have dared to make all sacrifices for what they believe to be loyalty. may not be overlooked as we contemplate the darker side of war. In the case of the half dozen young men whose life choices we glimpse in the present lesson, Jesus of Nazareth represented to them the call to the best possible expression of themselves. Two of them, at least, for-sook the second-best for the best. Three of them brought dear ones into the same discipleship of the new Master. In so doing, they all found a newness and greatness of life that passed their imagination.

The Man Who Abdicated Possibly the man who can best understand the sublimity of the great renunciation of John the Baptist, in surrendering his leadership and his disciples to Jesus, is the pastor who, upon the advent of an evangelist in his community, suspends his own plans, and becomes a mere assistant to the temporary preacher, probably being denounced by the latter after all: All the while he knows that the evangelist could not hold a pastorate or succeed in the exacting and continuing work of the man whom he has for the moment displaced and obscured.

John the Baptist was so thoroughly first-class that he was able to take a second place. He was great enough to know a greater. Therefore, with fine magnanimity, he made way for Jesus. All the prestige he had won, all the popularity he had built up all the following he had gained, he laid down as a cloak on the highway of the One whose messenger he had been. Let us tarry to thank God for this John the Baptist spirit, which has never been absent from the church.
