“Yes, everybody who knows prefers Sealdsweet grapefruit” — Dr. Sealdsweet Citrus. There is nourishment as well as tonic in grapefruit juice. A whole Sealdsweet grapefruit makes a wise breakfast for the brainworker. Doctors welcome them in many sick-rooms.

Sealdsweet grapefruit, Florida's choicest produced by leading cooperating growers

The Florida Citrus Exchange is a non-profit association of growers who ship their selected grapefruit and oranges under the famous red Sealdsweet mark. Sealdsweet fruit is juicy and thin-skinned. Eat Sealdsweet grapefruit three times a day to aid digestion, tone up the system, relieve sluggish liver, brain-fag, "grumpy" nerves. The fruit acids tend to cleanse the blood. Best of all is their taste.

MARY ARLINE ZURHORST, principal, National School Domestic Arts and Sciences, Washington, D. C., perhaps the foremost health-cooking expert in America, says: "It is a well-known fact that most famous European sanatoriums restrict their patients to a breakfast of tea, orange marmalade and dry toast. The patient thus secures the delicious flavor of fresh fruit and the natural sugar and medicinal qualities."

Buy Sealdsweet oranges See the red label. Thin-skinned and sweet. They give you plenty of juice and little pulp. Have a bowl of them always handy for guests; give the children plenty every day. On every box and wrapper. Only our carefully selected oranges and grapefruit bear this Sealdsweet mark. Be certain that all you buy are Sealdsweet.

69 ways to serve grapefruit and oranges. Our illustrated book, "The Health Fruits of Florida," tells them all. Gives advice of health authorities on how to stay well, etc. Send for free copy.
