Tommy was with the courting party a great deal these days, for he was lonely, and there was a sobriety on him which needed much gaiety to relieve it. A change had come over him, and it was due to Geraldine Benning. Since he had been a very small boy, Tommy Tinkle had enshrined Geraldine in his heart as a goddess without flaw and without imperfection.

By winter, however, the specter had been driven well into the background, and only now and then its shadow was seen in the patient blue eyes of Jean and in the luminous dark gray eyes of Tavy; but sometimes, even in the happiest moments, an unexpected word or sight would bring back a flash of hideous memory; and this is the price of wretchedness, that memory never lets it die; it only slumbers.

These, however, were only the ordinary activities, provided by a pair of unusually ardent wooers. The great, the marvelous, the overwhelming enjoyment was the house of the royal princess! It had been bought, at last, and paid for out of Harrison Stuart's and Jean's savings, a beautiful little cottage, in sight of the river and within three-quarters of an hour of the city, and with ground enough to build another cottage; spacious lawns between, shaded by towering old trees, and for whom was that new cottage to be built?

Another month; but this was the easiest way out of it. To avoid further importunity, Billy stayed away. During the following week, however, the name of John Doe grew and grew! The floating dome was not a matter to be taken lightly by those who so thoroughly understood and appreciated it; and, moreover, the firm of William Lane had become too important for any gentleman with the silver Vandyske.

So, one bright noon-time, Ainsley Pulham with a jolly committee from the T-Beam Club, stormed the office of William Lane, and demanded of the snub-nosed office boy to see John Doe. They not only demanded this, but they followed right into the private office of the dignified elderly gentleman with the silver Vandyske.

"I'll send it to you," diplomatically evaded Mr. Doe, pushing back in his mind the painful memory of a disagreeable and an expulsion at the T-Beam Club. When he again became Harrison Stuart, his first act would be to reinstate himself there; so he would manage to hold off that application blank for three weeks.

tates me is what will Tavy wear? This was the greeting of Tommy Tinkle, as he entered the enchanted pink and gray apartments, with a roll of evening papers under his arm.

"To the banquet," Tommy aggressively sat in the bay window, with a nonchalant appearance of not meaning to give any more information until it was dragged out of him.

"What banquet?" "At the Hotel Nabob. Pleasant weather, isn't it? Looks like snow." Mrs. Stuart laughed and sat down opposite Tommy. She came into the parlor every time she heard his voice, for fear he might say something funny and she not hear it.

Club." He cast a sly glance in the direction of Jean Stuart. She had dropped her embroidery frame in her lap, and was gazing at Tommy with quiet patience. She remembered the T-Beam Club! "There will be just a few guests in the ladies' gallery after the coffee, and I'm wondering if Tavy will wear one of the new trousseau gowns, or just a regular frock. Oh; I might add that the banquet is to be in honor of Harrison Stuart."

"A little warm for snow, don't you think?" she drawled. Another painstaking stitch in her violet, and affected as great a degree of indifference as Tommy Tinkle.

and, sure enough, the doorbell rang. "Disappear," he told them. "The romance is Billy's. It's as good as the little daughter who was burned in the theater fire, but not so horrible."

"To see Tommy Tinkle handling reporters and guarding the ladies in their retreat would have been a joy, and it would have been a revelation in the art of sympathy to hear him tell how Harrison Stuart lost his memory for fifteen years, through a fall from a roof, and wandered all over the world, under the name of John Doe, until he was brought back to memory by the sight of his old friends in Billy Lane's office!"

There is more Catarh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment.
