THE WOMAN WHO DID NOT CARE

Girl at Jacob's Well Like Present Day "Popular" Variety

(By William T. Ellis.)

Because the principal highways of the great cities, and the places of public entertainment, are nowadays crowded with overdressed, over-rouged, oversophisticated women, who have apparently parted company with the womanly ideals of their grandmothers, it is easy and natural to say that the women of our time are careless of the great verities which have ennobled womanhood since the days of Mary. Such a judgment is unfair, because it fails to take into account the greater number of homekeeping, modest, cultivated, sweet, and sincere girls and women whose existence is not flaunted before the eye of the idlers on the highways of life.

So there is pertinency and profit in the present study of a woman of the long ago who was free, careless, cynical, immodest, and ready for any wayside acquaintance. This woman at Jacob's well embodied our modern ideas of the "advanced" and "worldly-wise" woman, except that she had neither wealth nor education. She was of the sort who profess to scoff at the modesty of their sisters. For herself, she was ready to strike up an acquaintanceship with any man that happened along; and she was too shallow to understand the significance of the fact that none of these friendships were continuing. She knew many men, but among them there was no one who respected her utterly and loved her devotedly, being willing to leave all else and cleave only unto her. Obviously, it is more of a tribute to a woman's worth to be loved by one true man, than to be "popular" with a crowd of men.

Pert, tantalizing, ingenious in excuse, quick in repartee, this woman of Sycchar saw things only in their superficial aspects. It is hard for the right sort of young man to believe in the existence of such women, who are not genuine, not good, not reverent, not constant and not truly loving. As one sees the throngs of ultra-fashionably-gowned women, in restaurants and hotels and places of entertainment and on the streets, and knows them for light-minded spenders and wasters, mere moths fluttering around the dangerous candle of pleasure, one finds it difficult to visualize them as the makers of happy, restful homes, as the inspirers of men, and as the mothers of patriots, heroes and saints.

This is a phase of the modern "woman question" from which we shrink; it is more satisfactory to contemplate that larger number of women, who while splendidly true to the type of the Samaritan woman, are expressing themselves in old and new ways for the present time, through home and church and club and social relationships. After all, as our story of the Samaritan woman makes clear the old, old thirst for life's realities is ever-present; it is merely unrecognized or hidden by the foothills.

When The Right Man Appears One sure mark of the best friend is that he helps us to be our best self. Jesus pre-eminently had this quality. He discovered the soul this misguided Sycchar woman. His directness and candor and sincere spirituality pierced the shell of her superficial worldliness. He met her on one level, and left her on a higher. Casual acquaintances—a thirsty man by a well, and a woman with a drinking vessel, eager for a flirtation—became friends on the high plane of concern about God and the human soul. Do we wonder how our touch affects the lives we meet? Are they left on a level where it is easier for them to think about God?

There was nothing snobbish about Jesus. He freely spoke to all whom he met on the highway of life. Last week we saw Him colloquing with a Jerusalem scholar and aristocrat; this week He is in conversation with a Samaritan woman who was apparently a field hand. Neither the fact that she was a woman nor the other fact that she was of the despised, hybrid Samaritan race, marred His real friendliness. Had He been more zealous for the minutiae of the strict Jewish law He would not have gone through Samaria, but would have made the long detour east of the Jordan.

Few places in Palestine are more thoroughly accredited than Jacob's well. It is near Mt. Gerizim and Mt. Ebal, and hard by is the city of Shechem, now called Nablus, a fanatical community where at present a garrison of Turkish troops are quartered. The tomb of Joseph is on the neighboring hillside. During the Crusades a church was built over the well, but it had been long in complete ruin; before the war, the Greek Church was building a new edifice. I have drunk from the deep well that Jacob dug; and the monk who was my conductor seemed to marvel that I did not carry any of this holy water away.

The Wells of the World What thoughts throng one as he stands by the worn stone coping of this very well upon which the weary Saviour rested! Nothing is more suggestive to a thoughtful traveler than these ancient wells of the Orient. But this one typifies the highest truth—the Water of Life. A public fountain in Philadelphia bears the simple inscription, "Whosoever drink-eth of this water shall thirst again"—a picture of the transitoriness of all the satisfactions that earth offered. This jaded woman, who had drunk the cup of passion to its dregs, had a soul-thirst too great for her own understanding. Jesus met her real need by offering her the privilege of becoming herself a fountain; and when she accepted His gift, she did begin to supply others in the village of Sycchar. Even this loose woman that is Christ's plan for all His friends. He does not make them cisterns, mere receivers and containers of the water of grace; He makes them fountains, flowing and springs of blessings. Modern hotels advertise, "Running water in all rooms." Would that the church might proclaim, "Flowing waters in all saints." We want anything else more than we want anything else this side of heaven.

In Shanghai there is a fine thoroughfare called "Bubbling-Well Road," which is as badly misnamed as some Christians, for its well is neither bubbling nor sweet. But what a joy it would be if we could all have our homes on a spiritual "Bubbling-Well Road." For the waters of grace are "living" waters, fresh, sweet and effervescent. Unless Christ is a present reality. He is not a reality at all. One cannot live on old spiritual experiences. Unless he can subsist on last year's bread. Day by day Christ is to be experienced anew by all who would be fountain-friends of His.

The Factious Approach To be willing to accept favors is more difficult for high spirits than to be willing to bestow them. The exquisite tactfulness of the Master's approach to this common woman is noteworthy: He permitted her to do Him a favor. That is often the surest approach to the good will of a person. The weary, thirsty Jesus sought a drink at the hands of the woman who had doubtless come from the harvest field with a vessel to be filled, in wayside ministries there must be wisdom in making a beginning. Contact is the first important step in personal work. So this tired traveler entered the first and most natural door to this woman's confidence. All the surroundings recall to the modern traveler, as to Jesus and the Samaritan woman, the history of the Jews. In Nablus alone does one find a synagogue of the Samaritans. So when the talk of Jesus crowded the woman close, and He had shown to her her real self, she took refuge in a theological controversy — no new dodge.

Then followed the greatest definition ever made of spiritual religion. We are amazed that such treasures should be poured out to a congregation of one — and such a one at that! Some teachers and preachers do not do their best because they do not have hearers worthy of them. That was not the Jesus way. He gave His finest to the least deserving. Last week we learned how one timorous aristocrat heard "God so loved the world." Now it is to the Samaritan peasant woman that the words ring out: "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth."

In the light of that sublime declaration from the lips of the Lord Himself, how all petty controversies over forms and codes and creeds, and the lesser things that make up our denominationalism, shrivel into nothingness. The plumb-line has been laid to our building by the Master; except our worship conform thereto, all of its beauty and ecclesiastical correctness will be in vain. These are the words to whisper to our own hearts as we enter upon our daily devotions, and as we approach the sanctuary on the Sabbath — "Spirit and Truth." In this immortal story, the Samaritan woman found the Messiah for herself; and straightway her entire life was changed and she became a bearer of the Good News. May the same result follow its study by countless lives, the world around.
