MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to flush Kidneys if Back hurts or Bladder bothers.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush out the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

FOODS THEY BUILD OR DESTROY

AMAZING BUT RARELY SUSPECTED TRUTHS ABOUT THE THINGS YOU EAT
By ALFRED W. McCANN

At a Critical Period in the Operations of the Plan Designed by Commissioner of Accounts Leonard M. Wallstein to Gather Legal Evidence Against the Meat Inspection Graft System, a Leak From Headquarters Which Stand in the Way of Honest Law Enforcement in the United States, Nearly Resulted in a Miscarriage of the Events That Finally Led to the Conviction in 1916 of a Gang of Wholesale Poisoners.

The trap designed by Commissioner of Accounts Leonard M. Wallstein to catch the slaughterers of 61,000 tubercular animals in the act of bribing Health Department officials to pass loathsome specimens of diseased meat for food purposes was set by two men connected with the commissioner's office—P. A. Johann and William H. Boyle.

As Johann and Boyle were assigned to the case, Veterinarian Frederick W. Schoneberg was added to the Health Department staff of meat inspectors.

The sublime sense of security under which the protected slaughterers operated was evidenced by their attempt to seduce Schoneberg on the very day of his appointment to office.

Schoneberg was informed that if he would shut his eyes to the diseased bandboxes, or "bandies," as the slaughterers called them, he would find his income increased to two or three times the amount paid him by the City of New York for protecting the health of New York's children against the perils of cancerous and tuberculous meat.

Schoneberg reported the circumstances to his superior, Inspector Salthie, knowing that Commissioner Wallstein was interested in the slaughterhouse cases, sent Schoneberg to see him.

When Schoneberg, whose honesty had been tested, declared his willingness to follow instructions, he was ordered by Wallstein to meet the slaughterers in any graft-giving proposition they might make to him, and thus establish himself in their confidence.

The following day, Feb. 8, 1916, while on duty, Schoneberg was requested to remove some nauseating carcasses and glands from a diseased carcass which he had condemned. The carcass was a mass of tubercles.

"We can use that meat," said its owner, "if you will look out for us we will look out for you."

Schoneberg passed the diseased meat. This act established himself in the confidence of the slaughterers, and on the same day he was informed that the profits on any diseased carcass saved by him would be split fifty-fifty.

The mere fact that the official had been offered money for such heinous purposes did not constitute legal evidence of crime. It was one man's word against another. Corroboration was necessary.

So Schoneberg was instructed to work to the end that his bribes might be passed to him in the presence of a third person.

After a month of quiet operations, in which he was shifted from one establishment to another, taking bribes in each of them, he was instructed to express himself as being afraid of a frame-up.

There is too much newspaper talk about graft in these places and too much excitement all around for me to run any more chances by taking any more money here," he said to the bribe givers.

"I want to be paid outside hereafter. I've got a fellow who manages my express business in the Bronx. He has collected for me before and my share of the dirty after this has got to come through him."

At first the packers refused to meet him on this basis, declaring that it was bad business.

After numerous stubborn arguments he succeeded at last in inducing one of the slaughterers March 24, 1916 to pay him outside.

On this occasion, Boyle, posing as Callahan, Schoneberg's "graft collector," was introduced. Gradually Callahan won the confidence of the bribe giver, overcame his fears, and the system began to work.

When the other slaughterers, seeing that one of their number had, without annoyance, entered into the Callahan collection scheme, they gradually, one by one, overcame their caution and did likewise.

There were twelve slaughterers implicated. Commissioner Wallstein determined that from the outside payments going until every one of them could be indicted.

In the mean time the slaughterers began to mistrust one of the other nine veterinarians, Dr. Ross.

"We've got to get rid of Ross," they informed Callahan. "If Schoneberg gets rid of him we'll give him an additional $85 a week and $10 a week for each of the other slaughter houses over here, making $125 a week extra."

"No matter what house he gets transferred to he'll get his extra money just the same and he won't have to collect any of it. When he hangs up his coat in the locker we'll put the money in his pocket, the same as we do with the rest of the inspectors."

At this critical period the confidence which Schoneberg and Callahan had developed between themselves and the slaughterhouses was torpedoed by Lucius P. Brown, director of the Bureau of Food and Drug Inspection, who informed one of the suspected officials that Schoneberg had been approached with offers of money.

The slaughterers were immediately tipped off. Schoneberg was described as a plant, and the unfinished work of collecting evidence came temporarily to an end.

In order to finish the job, the results of this disastrous leak from headquarters had to be overcome and the old confidence re-established.

That this consummation was created by Brown was ever brought about, even to the partial degree necessary to complete the evidence against the slaughterers, was little short of miraculous.

STUDENTS FORM MILITARY CLUB

Lebanon Valley College Men Get Together For Drill, Under Experienced Officers

Annapolis, Pa., Feb. 13.—Last night the male students at Lebanon Valley College made their initial appearance for drill under the auspices of the recently formed Military Training Club that has been inaugurated at this institution. Following the precedent of many of the larger colleges and universities the men at Lebanon Valley got together last week, but the organization is purely a student affair, and while some of the faculty individually have lent their assistance the instructors as a whole have not taken any part in the movement.

Under the direction of Lieutenant France, of Lebanon, an office in the National Reserve Corps; Lieutenant Barnhart, also of Lebanon, and an officer in the National Guard; Sergeant Davis, formerly in the Coast

Defense Corps, and a resident of Annapolis at the present time; together with a number of students who were at the Plattsburg Training Camp last summer, the first work of forming squads and a few preliminary commands were taught the recruits. Although the thermometer registered something near zero the work was given out doors and lasted for one hour. Much enthusiasm is being shown.
