asked Dr. Keene to stay, which the latter consented to do.

Dr. Keene's next step was to make a motion to refer the whole proposition back to the special committee

This met with opposition from the start, some members of the Board declaring that such action was a contradiction of the plans adopted to have fair competitive examinations for all architects.

President Stamm suggested that the special committee might be unable to put any Harrisburg architect in the same class with Mr. Ittner as being equally qualified.

"If that is the case, I'll support the committee," Dr. Keene at once declared.

"The Fifth Man"

Mr. Enders took the floor and began:

"Four weeks ago I was told four men of this board were for Lloyd, and if I would come over I would be the fifth man. We have the five this afternoon, apparently, but I'm glad I'm not the fifth man."

No action had been taken up to this time on Dr. Keene's amendment. Dr. Yates, when attention was called to this, offered an amendment, as follows:

Mr. Enders seconded it, and suggested that instead of the original motion the five directors refusing to accept the report should be named as a committee.

Dr. Yates' amendment was killed, 5 to 4.

Directors Keene, Boll, Boyer, Bretz and Werner voted against it.

Dr. Keene's motion was next called for a vote. The motion to refer the whole question back to the special committee.

Directors Keene, Boll, Boyer, Bretz and Werner voted for it.

Boyer "Not Approached"

"I would have named Mr. Lloyd this afternoon if I had had an opportunity," Director Boyer declared.

The committee report which caused the break called attention to the point that the School Board had given the power to expend $1,250,000 for school improvements, the biggest construction loan of its kind ever carried for a single improvement plan.

The Ittner Recommendation

In recommending Mr. Ittner the committee said:

"You have had before you in competition seven architects with offices in Harrisburg and six coming from outside the city. All of them have presented you as being architects of ability, and all of them have had experience in schoolhouse construction.

Mr. Ittner was for many years the architect of the St. Louis school board, retiring from official connection with that board about a year ago.

The buildings designed and constructed by him in St. Louis involved an expenditure of nearly $9,000,000. A commission consisting of the superintendent of the schools of the District of Columbia, the supervising architect of the United States Treasury and the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, created several years ago by act of Congress to investigate and report on the cost of school buildings, made a report in which they referred particularly to Mr. Ittner's work in St. Louis and said:

"The newer school buildings of St. Louis (designed and built by Mr. Ittner) are probably the best in the United States."

Mr. Ittner has built a number of school buildings in Minneapolis, including the high school, the cost of which was over half a million dollars; and of both the man and his work there we get the highest praise from an independent and responsible source. Mr. Ittner has been the architect for nine years for Gary, Ind., where William Wirt is carrying on his notable experiments in educational methods, in the working out of which talent, originality, sympathy and vision on the part of the architect are of the utmost importance.

"Mr. Ittner is just now building two new buildings there at a cost of about $300,000 each. He has completed, or is about completing, a high school building at Washington, D. C., costing about $1,200,000, and of his work there the school authorities of the District speak in high terms. Mr. Ittner has been the architect for the school board of Erie, this state, in the expenditure of over a million dollars in buildings, and has now under way, upon commission, plans for two more to cost about $500,000, these new commissions indicating the board's confidence in him, independently of other assurances we have received of the satisfactory character of his services there. Mr. Ittner has built many other schoolhouses in various parts of the country outside of St. Louis, all involving an expenditure of over

Sale of Sample Linens

Travelers samples of towels, napkins, pattern cloths, lunch cloths, etc. At this time the sale is doubly interesting. First, because the linens are the very finest grades—second, because the prices quoted are sensational as compared with the average retail prices now generally quoted.

Valentines

Once, in the carefree girlhood days I measured as things worth while, Books and bonbons and flowers rare, But now at such trifles I smile.

For my valentines are far deeper things: A man's heart, honest and strong, A cosy nest that we both call "home" Where peace and contentment belong.

A wee little body so round and fair, As pure as the angels above, Where deep in clear baby eyes I read The infinite meaning of love.

Directors Oppose Choice for Architect

President Stamm, who is also chairman of the special committee, then addressed the Board and advisory members making substantially the following statement:

"The report of the joint committee was so framed in the judgment of its members as to lead to the inevitable conclusion that Mr. Ittner was the only man that could possibly be selected, and this without the slightest reflection on the judgment of any of them."

Members of the Board who voted against the choice then began explaining why they took their action. Despite President Stamm's statement that he did not believe any local architect could be considered as even on equal terms with Mr. Ittner, the five members would not change their views.

An opportunity was given by President Stamm to have any one of the five members name a Harrisburg architect instead, and to let the Board go into regular session and vote on the selection. This none of the five members attempted to do, admitting that they had little fault to find with the report of the special committee.

"Not Worried"

Intimations were made by Dr. Yates and Mr. Enders that certain members of the Board had been approached by employers and told to vote a certain way and that an architect of this city had walked the streets and smilingly remarked that he was not worried about what action the Board took.

Mr. Dacon, too, declared that he was told on good authority that Mr. Lloyd had five votes in the Board. Mr. Dacon was on the special committee which considered all briefs submitted by city and out-of-town architects. In speaking of the committee's choice, he said:

"I would not say that any Harrisburg architect was even in a class with Mr. Ittner."

The five directors refusing to change their decision, and refusing to name a Harrisburg man, the joint session was adjourned and the School Board began an official session.

Dr. Keene, the first to take exception to the report of the special committee, then asked to be excused. Mr. Enders objected and President Stamm
