Face the Facts, Start Today to Think and Save.

It is high time we Americans are facing the serious problems that confront each one of us. It matters not whether your wages are $10 a week or $1000 a week.

As a Shoe Merchant I see this. Paying a week's wages for a pair of fancy shoes that have not the wearing qualities of a good neat black shoe that costs one-fourth as much is money thrown away that we will sadly need for butter, eggs, bread and meat.

As sellers of shoes, we sell what the people want, of course, but it makes me sick at heart to have to buy and sell a pair of shoes for $5 or $6 that have not $2 worth of wear in them.

To-day we are selling one-half our shoes for less than it costs to make them, yet we will not advance a price until our stock of over 200,000 pairs are sold and we are compelled to go into the open market and pay more than we are selling the same shoes for to-day.

I beseech you, spender of money, to pause and give serious thought to what you buy, as to whether it's the best you can get for wear and service, whether you buy in any one of our 25 stores or outside.

MEN ARE BETTER MANNERED FOLK

That Is, One of the Species Says So in Letter to Beatrice Fairfax

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX. A correspondent who signs himself "A mere man," writes me a letter which is worth careful thought.

"Why is it that most working girls are so ill-mannered? I used to think that women were better-mannered than men, but I find by experience that such is not the case. The average working girl in stores, etc., is impertinent and feels insulted if you ask her to attend to you and to waiters will throw down your change in a perfunctory and almost insulting manner.

"The refined well-mannered young lady who used to be so prevalent some years ago seems to have disappeared. What's the explanation?" Is this true girls? Or is there even a moment of truth in it? Don't toss your heads and angrily deny it for I am sure the excited man who wrote so emphatically must have had several unpleasant experiences before he decided to go on record as a critic of feminine manners.

I know quite well how tired you get standing on your feet practically all day long and trying to figure out the wants of people who can't or won't make up their minds. I know how hard you work and how little kindness comes to you across the counter, but you owe something to yourselves and to the fine chivalry of womanhood. It doesn't take a bit more time or energy to smile and speak in a pleasant voice than it does to scowl and grumble. In fact, when you slam things down on the counter you are wasting nerve force and energy.

Every once in a while I find myself compelled to quote the old German proverb, which translates itself: "As one shouts into the forest, so the echo returns." To say "please," "thank you," and other little words of courtesy, is almost habitual with most of us; to make the tone match the word is easy; and to fit your words with your attitude and attitude into friendly communication is well worth your while.

In a certain large shop there stands behind what New England calls the "small wares counter" (and which of the rest of the country terms the "notion counter"), an elderly and very unattractive looking woman who gets $20 a week for a position which generally pays about $8. Women actually stand in line waiting for this pleasant, self-respecting and angular New England spinster to give her interested, if dignified, attention to their needs.

She matches silk with as much zest as if they were going to sew her own fine seams. With quiet authority, she discusses whether you ought to wear a "cap" or a "fringe" hair net and the advisability of buying bronze instead of black hairpins.

That almost homely middle-aged woman started life with the handicap of ugliness, with no brilliant intelligence, and without robust health. She brought courtesy, interest, kindness and dignified friendliness to a simple task. It has paid her well for her salary is a splendid one and she has faithful customers who greet her at Christmas and Easter with gold pieces which she has fully earned.

"The voice with a smile wins," and the manner with the scowl loses. The world responds to friendliness. Now, girls, are you foolish enough to be rude and impatient either in work or when you play? My experience with the shop girl is almost invariably pleasant. Although the girls who wait on me do not know who I am, I know that I am their "Big Sister," and I offer them a big sisterly friendliness to which they seldom fail to respond.

Mr. Mere Man, are you sure you are courteous and kind, or do you go into shops with an irritable air which fairly drives the tired girl who waits on you to show all that is least amiable and least desirable in her nature? Who is to blame? I should be glad to hear from some of my girls on this subject.

COUNT ZEPPELIN, AIRSHIP PIONEER, DIES IN GERMANY

Inventor of Great Dirigible Made His First Flight in United States

Berlin, March 9.—Count Ferdinand Zeppelin, builder of the world's first practical dirigible balloon, died yesterday at Charlottenburg, near here, of pneumonia. He was 79 years old.

Count Zeppelin became famous at 70 as builder of the first practical dirigible balloon. On his 75th birthday he navigated his twentieth airship to celebrate the occasion. But before he had achieved fame he had devoted a half century of his life, exhausted his personal fortune of $750,000 and sacrificed a brilliant career as a German cavalry leader, in conquering the air.

Emperor William, in 1914, proclaimed Count Zeppelin to be "the greatest German of the twentieth century." As a token of appreciation he conferred upon him the exalted Order of the Black Eagle, the highest honor in the Emperor's power.

Flew First in United States It was in the United States that Count Zeppelin made his first balloon ascension. It occurred while he was following General Carl Schurz in the Civil War as a military observer for the German army. A captive balloon in use for military observations by Union troops greatly interested the young German officer, and he was taken up in it in 1863.

A generation before Kitty Hawk and the Wright brothers, the plodding zealot, deaf to scoffers, was convinced that he was on the right track. Ten years after his retirement from army, in 1890, he saw the first fruits of his labors. Already his shops at Friedrichshafen had assumed vast proportions, and his private fortune, considerable in amount, had wellnigh been exhausted.

Thirty-Mile Flight On Sunday, July 1, 1900, his first aerial levitation was hauled from its shed on the shore of Lake Constance and made a successful trip of more than thirty miles.

It was not until eight years later, however, that the possibilities of his enterprise began to dawn on Germany. In 1908 he made many trips, one of them involving a stay of thirty-seven hours in the air. After that Zeppelin built many airships. Many of them came to tragic ends in gales or flames, but the inventor continued, and obtained the support of the government.

Within four years there were disturbing rumors of giant aircraft that soared over France and even England. Count Zeppelin began to talk with confidence of his transatlantic trip, and a vast dirigible was built for polar exploration.

Then came the war, and the raids on England. There were reports—never warranted by statements from the inventor—that he had become a fanatic on the invasion of England by air.

Shippensburg Carriage Works Damaged by Fire

Shippensburg, Pa., March 9.—Fire yesterday morning wrecked the big carriage factory of Thrush and Stough, with a loss of more than $25,000. The blaze started in the office on the first floor of the building about 4:30 o'clock and the firemen worked until noon before the flames were extinguished. The fire was confined to the main building, but other structures of the plant, now menaced and were somewhat damaged by fire and water. Defective wiring is blamed for the fire. All of the tools, material and equipment were lost, and about 150 finished and partly completed vehicles destroyed.

The firm employed fifty men and was rushed with orders. Rebuilding will be begun as soon as insurance matters are adjusted.

W. W. Stough, 88 years old, the founder of the firm, who has been in active charge for 40 years, is prostrated as a result of the loss and excitement attending the fire.
