tice, however, said they had definitely established that Boy-Ed had been in this city. They refused to reveal the source of this startling information, but said they had asked Mrs. Mackay-Smith and her daughter if Boy-Ed had visited their home. A note was sent in to both of the women, the detectives admitted, and returned with the reply that "Mrs. Mackay-Smith and her daughter had nothing to say." During the last week, too, an esplonage has been kept on the house where the widow of the former Episcopal prelate dwells with her two daughters. Miss Virginia Mackay-Smith was at one time reported to be the fiance of Captain Boy-Ed, but the engagement was never officially confirmed by the family. German custom prohibits the marriage of a naval or military officer without the sanction of the Kaiser. Captain Boy-Ed is said to have asked to the temperor is reported to have flashed back, his agreement by wireless to Sayville. The censor, however, viewed the message from the German Emperor with suspicion and never forwarded it to the embassy. Thus the attach never learned that his imperial ruler had sanctioned the marriage until he was exiled and returned to the Fatherland.

Bishop's Widow Silent

A score or more secret service operators and customs officials hunted the city last night to find the elusive German, headed by Garbarino and Brooks, the special agents of the Department. If apprehended the captain will be handed over to the immigration officials at Gloucester, as he is in this country now in contravention of the alien laws.

These developments were hardly more dramatic than the admission by one of the secret service agents that the home of Mrs. Alex. Mackay-Smith, widow of Bishop Mackay-Smith, widow of Bishop Mackay-Smith, and here haughter. Miss Virginia, had been under surveillance for at least a week, and that Mrs. Mackay-Smith and here daughter. Miss Virginia, had been questioned by special agents as to any visit that Captain Boy-Ed might have made to their home. The captain was banished from this country by President Wilson in December, 1915, after the State Department had received proofs that the German diplomat was engaged in conspiracy to violate the neutrality of this country.

Seek Elusive Plotter

Mrs. Mackay-Smith lives at 125 South Twenty-second street. About 3:30 o'clock a woman visitor left the house, bowed out by a courtly butter. Later the butler was asked if Mrs. Mackay-Smith had gone away in a closed carriage, was not his employer, but a visitor.

In the evening a visit to the house brought word from the butler that "Mrs. Mackay-Smith had gone out and would not return until very late."
