

Tax Collector Surrenders When Appeal Fails

West Chester, Pa., March 16. — In April of 1916 Roland E. Clevensine, a former tax collector in Spring City, was convicted on charges of embezzlement of public funds, and after stay of judgment was denied by the court he was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and serve one year in the county jail. His counsel appealed to the Pennsylvania State Superior Court, which recently affirmed the judgment of the Chester County Court.

Grand Duke Nicholas Comes Back to Old Place at Army Head

At the opening of the war Grand Duke Nicholas was appointed commander-in-chief of the Russian armies. He quickly came into world-wide prominence by his series of victories against the Austrians in Galicia during the summer of 1914 which made him the popular hero of the Russians.

Even the great Austro-German drive in the following summer hardly lessened his prestige, although the Russians were forced back all along the front, losing most of Galicia, all of Poland and parts of White Russia and the Baltic provinces. During this disastrous campaign the Russians, short of guns and ammunition, preserved an unbroken front and the grand duke conducted the retreat in a manner which won the highest praise from military men.

Despite this, the Grand Duke was deposed by Emperor Nicholas in September, 1915, the Emperor himself taking command of the Russian armies and sending the former chief commander to the Caucasus.

In this comparatively inconspicuous position little was heard of the Grand Duke as a personage. The results of his military genius, however, soon began to make themselves apparent in the results achieved by the Russian Caucasus armies.

The brilliant campaign which he conducted in Turkish Armenia speedily led to the fall of Erzerum, the Turkish stronghold in the eastern part of the province, and later of Trebizond, on the Black Sea coast, and Erzingan, further west in the interior.

For virtually a year past nothing has been heard of the Grand Duke. It has been assumed, however, that he was still in command in the Caucasus. Already this year, the activities and successes of the Russian armies in the Persian branch of the Caucasus operations have given indications that some skillful guiding hand, presumably that of Nicholas, was responsible for the campaign apparently designed to cut off the Turkish forces driven from Baghdad by the British and now in full retreat up the Tigris towards Mosul.

Grand Duke Nicholas, who was born in 1856, is the second cousin of Nicholas II. His part in the Russo-Japanese war was an active and distinguished one. In 1896 he became president of the Council of National Defense. Twice in that year his life was unsuccessfully attempted.

Great Britain Expects to Recognize Revolt

London, March 16.—Great Britain has not officially recognized the new Russian government at the hour the House of Commons met to-day. Chancellor Bonar Law, replying to a question whether the house would send a message of sympathy to the Duma and what steps were being taken to recognize the new government, replied:

"The honorable members may feel no anxiety but I think they recognize that we must see the situation a little more clearly."

Mr. Bonar Law added that telegrams were being received hourly from Petrograd. He promised a statement on the situation in Russia on the conclusion of the business of the House.

NOMINAL LIFE RESUMED AFTER RUSS TURMOIL

(Continued From First Page) In which the same spirit of good order prevailed through the hours when the revolt was at its height. Unorganized crowds of revolvers seemed to take pride in 'doings things regularly.'

"In all sections of the city the crowds commanded all motor cars on the streets, but in every case took the names of the occupants and promised to report the names and circumstances to the Duma committee and facilitate the return of the car."

Practically Bloodless

"In the view of the populace the revolution was practically bloodless. Certainly there has been some loss of life, but it is insignificant in popular estimation as compared with the tremendous loss of life in Petrograd weeks past everybody in Petrograd realized that a crisis of some kind was approaching. The temper, even of the most patient in the world, becomes frayed when they are obliged to stand three or four hours in a temperature ten or twenty degrees below zero waiting for bread which often was not obtained for several days to eight and nine times their ordinary price and other food commodities were at a cost practically prohibitive to the poor."

"The explanations of the volatile new Minister of Agriculture, M. Ritich, were not calculated either to relieve the present hunger or the anxiety for the future. He attributed the delay in the arrival of flour to a snow storm, as though snow storms in Russia in February were unparalleled phenomena. The people in Petrograd were not the only ones who squirmed under this sort of explanation. The Duma leaders as well regarded the situation as inexcusable and President Rodzianko finally justified in going to the length of offering his whole-hearted assistance in putting into effect special emergency measures for increasing the food supply."

Deserted by People

"Minister of the Interior Protopopoff was absent from Saturday's conference on the food question. M. Protopopoff is a wealthy manufacturer and a courtier with a reputation for debonair duplicity. Residing in the Tsarskoe-Selo palace he was reported lately as spending a large part of his time indulging in spiritualistic trances. Equally detested by the parliamentarians and the people he never appeared in the Duma since his ministerial appointment."

"With such an administration of agriculture and the interior and with the premier a nonentity it was not surprising that the food prospects were regarded by the members of the Duma with the greatest alarm and dismay. While the Duma leaders were discussing the food question the people in the streets were getting more and more voluble in their protests against the whole situation."

Further details of the events preceding the revolutionary coup in Petrograd given in a Reuter dispatch from the Russian Capital. The dispatch says that the working class had decided on "successful" street demonstrations on Saturday. Early on Saturday morning the police warned the citizens not to leave their houses as it was not safe. In other words, the food demonstrations were to be suppressed with an iron hand. Undeterred, however, by this warning the people came out in such numbers that the Nevsky Prospect and other main thoroughfares were thronged.

Middle Class in Crowds

The crowds were mostly from the middle classes as the roads from the labor district were deserted. The people were so good natured and jovial that the authorities believed at first that the day would pass all right. Nevertheless they took precautions by sending for reinforcements.

Patrols of Cossacks, mounted and foot soldiers and police lined the Nevsky Prospect and the court yards of the houses were filled with reserves. The crowd cheered the troops and Cossacks warmly as the soldiers showed themselves appreciative. There was an unprecedented feeling of camaraderie between the people and the troops. Cossacks doffed their hats repeatedly to the cheerers and some groups of soldiers called back at the crowds. It was the sign of the times which the authorities, however, failed to read.

Archives of Russian Secret Police Burned by Mobs of Persons

London, March 16.—Practically the entire archives of the Russian secret police were burned by the revolutionists, according to a Times dispatch from Petrograd. When the building which the notorious Third Section had its headquarters was captured eager crowds sacked the offices, blasted open safes, wrecked strong boxes and rushed into the streets carrying masses of documents, which were quickly converted into blazing bonfires. Not all the documents, however, were destroyed. The new government has obtained possession of lists of spies and informers who are being fast run to earth.

Although the populace is strongly disposed to wreak summary vengeance on those who incurred their hate in the days of the old regime, the prisoners are safe once they are under the protection of the soldiers. The strongest anti-German feeling animates the population and all highly placed personages who are suspected of German proclivities or who bear German titles or titles are being systematically hunted down.

Revolutionists Mean To Push War Against Germany to Victory

Petrograd, Thursday, March 15, via London, March 16.—The problems which we are solving to solve consist of the re-establishment in Russia of a power capable of giving the people final victory over the enemy," said Professor Paul Miliukoff, the new foreign minister and one of the most prominent Liberal leaders in Russia, in a statement to The Associated Press.

"The great crime of the late government consisted of throwing the country into complete disorganization and subjecting it to the hardest trials. This state of affairs might even have had dangerous effects on the issue of the war. The increase of popular discontent was the cause of the turn which events have taken."

"During a few days the Duma attracted to itself the attention of the whole nation, and was the center of enormous moral force. To-day it has material force also at its disposal, seeing that the army has taken its side. Every hour brings news bearing witness to the continual growth of power of the forces of national representation."

"The new government considers it indispensable that the abdication of the Emperor be confirmed and the regency temporarily entrusted to Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch. Such is our decision. We consider it impossible to alter it."

Grand Duke Nicholas is Reported to Have Reached Russ Capital

London, March 16.—The Grand Duke Nicholas is reported in a Reuter's dispatch from Petrograd to have reached the Russian capital.

The dispatch says that he will probably take command of the troops. The question of replacing officers who were disbanded by their own troops is one which must be decided most promptly. In the meanwhile the provisional government is doing its utmost to straighten out the numerous tangles. The Duma and the Zemstvo council are working hand in hand, although issuing separate proclamations.

Despite the non-appearance of newspapers the public is better informed of what is going on than ever before. For this purpose a special squadron of motor cars have been commandeered by the executive committee and these cars go about the city distributing printed bulletins free to everybody. Thus the most authentic news gains speedy circulation.

FRENCH WANT GOLD

Paris, March 16.—A bill to demonetize existing French gold coinage has been introduced in the chamber of deputies by Deputies Lenoir, Bouffandeau and Eymond. The purpose is to force hoarders to bring out gold estimated at three billion francs which is still being kept in hiding despite patriotic appeals to the owners to exchange it for notes. The bill provides for the issue of a new design, which alone will have currency after the war.
