Every Plant in Country Building Airplanes For American Army and Navy

Washington, March 22.— Airplane manufacturers in conference with war, navy and post office department representatives to-day, proposed that the government choose not more than five models of airplanes for various purposes and that builders concentrate their efforts on these as a means of standardization and hastening the output. Nearly thirty different models are produced now. The makers suggested that two kinds of light, speedy planes for army and navy reconnaissance work, a heavy armored battle flyer, a cargo carrying machine for mail transportation and a lighter machine for commercial purposes should be sufficient types for all present assurances were given the government.
