

Aged Woman Feels Need of Constant Travel

How she was impelled by wanderlust to go traveling around the world in her seventy-ninth year, trekking through snow and ice in Alaska and drifting in a small boat along a river in China, was related by Mrs. Sofia Howarth, 83 years old, of Los Angeles, who is in the city after a return trip from the Panama canal. When she arrives in Los Angeles she will have completed a journey of more than 85,000 miles. Mrs. Howarth is wealthy. Her near relatives are dead, and until the desire for travel took possession of her to the exclusion of everything else, in her seventy-ninth year, she had been a stay-at-home. "I had been around hardly at all until I was nearly 80," she said. "Before I realized it I was on board the steamship 'Mongolian' bound for Honolulu. From there I went to the Philippines, thence to Japan and then to Port Said and through the Holy Land and Turkey and into Europe. I traveled alone, and never once did I have an unpleasant experience. It is wonderful to be elderly. It seems as though all your burdens are lifted from you, and every one tries to make things pleasant for you."—New York Telegraph.

Great German Leaders In Field Conference

London, March 23.—The German Imperial Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Amsterdam, left Berlin on Wednesday for General Headquarters to confer with Emperor William and Field Marshal von Hindenburg, chief of staff. In Parliamentary circles it is considered that at this conference important questions relative to foreign politics will be discussed.

MOTIVE FORCES AND INFLUENCES THAT HAVE BROUGHT NATIONS OF WORLD TO WAR ARE DISCUSSED

With This Country on Verge of Conflict, Subject Is Particularly Appealing; Books and Magazines Practically All Show Influence of World-wide Turmoil

The Great War, by George H. Allen, Ph. D., History Department, University of Pennsylvania. (Published by George Barrie's Sons, 1313 Walnut street, Philadelphia.)

With America on the verge of war, it is the duty of loyal citizens of the United States to intelligently inform themselves on the motive forces and influences that have been at work in bringing the nations of the world into conflict on the immense battlefield of Europe. There are so many factors entering into the analysis, moral, industrial, racial and political, that full many volumes are inadequate to a thorough discussion.

The causes and motives, the mobilization of the moral and physical forces, the conduct of the hostilities and the final results—these in order are taken up by Professor Allen, an authority on the subject, who in collaboration with Captain Henry C. Whitehead and Admiral F. E. Chadwick has devoted his energies to the production of a work that will go down among the historical monuments of the present war as an uniquely satisfactory in every regard.

Professor Allen has conjured up, by conscientious endeavor, unflinching energy and resourceful investigation and study, a summary of the world, to which the nations involved in this struggle are called to present their side of the case; the national mind of each is laid bare under a microscopic glass and the tremendous forces at work at the inception of the struggle are revealed and separated into their component parts until the reader has gained a clear conception of the vast extent of the vital elements involved. "The Great War" is a classic that will endure with the memory of man.

The Beetle, by Richard Marsh. (Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, $1.50 net.)

Mystery of hypnotic influence, fantastic horrors and many tense situations are brought before the reader as he goes on with the fascinating story of this author.

It is a story, powerful in its grip on the imagination, and yet does not go to extremes. Centered around the life of an English nobleman who has done some things he might not have done had he the opportunity to meet the same situation again, the skill with which this is told is remarkable.

It is a book which will be much more enjoyable if someone is near. If read alone, the mystery of "The Beetle" may cause a reader with imaginations to turn up the gas and look twice to see that no hideous be-factory is in hiding somewhere in the room. Yet with all its vague suggestions of superhuman mental suggestion and the shadows of strange horrors, the story is sure to please, and leaves at least part of the mystery unsolved.

When the public is given a truly American story of the knocks, bumps and romance in the life of a humorous Irishman, there can be no doubt but that it will be received with commendation.

In "Jerry" by Arthur Stanwood Pier, and published by Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.50 net, the public is given just such a story. From an iron mill worker to district attorney in a great city—this is the career of Jerry.

Confronted with numerous obstacles he only uses them to mount higher. Two murders and a suicide are brought into the picture in such a masterly way that the novel loses none of its romance.

Human nature of all kinds—the ward politician, life in police circles, the courageous and unshakable iron of Jerry as an honest policeman—these all tend to make the tale one of the finest in recent fiction.

He was a schoolmaster in a little British town. He wrote stories too and one morning awoke to find himself an accepted author. This schoolmaster-author John May Beith at the beginning of the great European War, but when Great Britain issued her call to arms, the author straightway changed his pen for a sword. He is now Captain John Beith and writes under the nom de plume of Ian Hay. "The First Hundred Thousand" by this author attained immense popularity and noteworthiness as a little book on "Getting Together," published under the double imprint of Doubleday, Page and Company, and Houghton, Mifflin Company.

"You don't really think we are too proud to fight, do you?" "Why can't you Brits be a bit kinder in your attitude to us?" "What do you expect to do about the submarine menace?" These are a few of the questions that the "average American" propounds to the "average Briton" in a conversation that they have on the attitude of the two countries toward one another. Designed evidently to promote a greater understanding between the two leading Anglo-Saxon nations of the world and likewise to stir forth in laconic phraseology the things for which England fights, "Getting Together" is written. Ian Hay was wounded in battle and spent some weeks in this country, during which time he gained the impressions which are set down in his book.

The White Queen of Okoyoko, by W. P. Livingston, a beautiful young folk's version of the same author's great missionary biography, "The Life of Mary Slessor of Calabar," (which has taken the English speaking world by storm as the greatest missionary biography since the Life of Livingstone.)

The Boys' Book of Canoeing and Sailing, by Warren H. Miller, author of "The Boys' Book of Hunting and Fishing," "Camp Craft," etc., is another practical attractive book in which the editor of "Field and Stream" has embodied information equally valuable to youthful or adult sportsman. It is illustrated elaborately with diagrams and drawings.

Scars and Stripes, by Porter Emerson Browne. A series of brilliant papers on the international situation. "I do not know any man," says Theodore Roosevelt, "who has made a more effective appeal to American loyalty."

Women Are People. A book of clever satirical verses by Mrs. Alice Duer Miller, who has been called "the poet laureate of the Cause," and who has come prominently to the front this winter as the author of the popular New York dramatic success, "Come Out of the Kitchen," starring Ruth Chatterton.

The Man Who Tried to Be It, by Cameron Mackenzie. A story of modern business, with a big new idea for every man in business to-day.

Had to Wash Own Socks; Sues Wife for Divorce

Boston, Mass., March 23.—Howard Bangs, son of John Kendrick Bangs, yesterday asked the Superior Court to grant him a divorce from his wife, Eleanor Carey Bangs. He told the judge that his wife used to come home at 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning, intoxicated. She used to flog and kick him, he said, and he was obliged to get out of his bed and go to the parlor to sleep. He testified that she never had a meal ready; that he was forced to go out to buy his own food and then go home and cook it. Bangs said he had to wash his own shirts and socks. He said she told him she wanted other men who had more money than he. He said she had married him, and that she could have married others. He said that he used to do some writing at home and she would destroy the manuscripts before he submitted them to the publishers. Judge Bell took the case under advisement.

Northumberland May Float $400,000 Road Bond Issue

Sunbury, Pa., March 23.—Northumberland county is considering entering into a good roads building agreement with the State on a 50-50 basis, and plans are being made to place a $400,000 bond issue before the voters at the next or a special election. The idea is the same as adopted in McKean and other counties, the county agreeing to spend as much money on the highways as the State. If the agreement is completed and the $400,000 bond issue approved by the voters, $200,000 would be available for road building in this county.

READY FOR ARSON'S PENALTY Lancaster, Pa., March 23.—George Seldomridge yesterday received a hearing and was committed for trial on a charge of setting fire to his own house. He admits his guilt, and will be sentenced Saturday.
