Dirgible Balloon Dirgible Balloon Ship ore by balloon route is the scheme of J. M. Nelson, of McCarty, Alaska, who is investigating the claims of a flexible dirigible type of aircraft being put on the market by a manufacturer here, says the Spo-kane Chronicle. Mr. Nelson will await a test of the machine before closing the deal, but if it is satisfac-tory will put a balloon in service. He proposes to use the craft to carry molybdenite ore from his prop-erty and to carry in supples. "Our property is fifty miles from McCarty, situated at the head of a glacier, where it is difficult to get in and out," said Mr. Nelson. Such a means of travel would be useful all year around, but in winter it would be especially valuable. The Spokane manufacturers say their machine will be able to carry a ton and make the trip of fifty miles in a little more than an hour, at about the cost of running an automobile. "Molybdenite is worth about $1.60 a pound; we have a ledge about eight feet wide, with twelve inches of pure ore," Nelson says. GIVES HIS ALL TO AID POOR

Relief Fund A. permanent fund that will afford a measure of relief for Spokane's poor was started when John Christiansen donated all his worldly possession: to the Spokane Social Scrvice Eureau. The amount is approximately $16,000 and includes a ranch worth $8,000, the remainder being in city property, says the Spokane Chronicle. Mr, Christiansen is 67 years old and believes his United States army pension will amply care for him for the remainder of his days. His desire to*see the money put to relief work among the poor while he still is alive prompted the gift. An effort will be made to secure additions to the fund. WHAT DOES A TICK COST?

made to secure additions to the fund. WHAT DOES A TICK COST? If 5,000 ticks take up homesteads on a sheep, that has one gallon, or 65,000 drops of blood in its body, and each tick demands one drop of blood a day for its living ration, how much more will it cost to feed that animal than one that is "unpopulated"? This is the problem propounded by Dr. E. T. Baker, of the Idaho Uni-versity, before the Northwest Live Stock conference at Spokane, says the Spokane Chronicle. "Homesteaders, forage/poisons and coyotes take the greatest toll from the flocks," declared Dr. Baker, "but something more must be done to stamp out the sheep tick pest. Ticks are exceedingly costly to the sheep-men in that a sheep afflicted with them must consume a great deal more food to make up for the loss of blood, than the sheep not thus trou-bled. "Forage poisons are killing $5.000.
