Frenchmen

A resolution presented by Representative Fletcher W. Sittes, Montgomery, extending the freedom of the State to the French and British commissioners was amended in the Senate to provide for the joint session and to formally invite the visitors. The House, which had previously passed the resolution, concurred.

Whereas, The United States of America has joined in arms with the governments and people of England, France, Russia and the allied countries in order that the world may be made safe for democracy

Whereas, The people of the United States of America are now honored by the presence in this land of three of the great leaders in this common cause of world freedom

Whereas, It is indicated that General Joffre and Monsieur Viviani will do the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania the great honor of entering its borders and visiting with its people

Whereas, The people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania are as a unit with the people of all the States of this nation in the earnest hope and determination that this great war for the rights of man and the progress of civilization shall terminate satisfactorily to the nations aligned for a greater democracy and a greater world freedom, therefore be it

Resolved, If the Senate concur, That the freedom of the State of Pennsylvania is by the whole people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, through their representatives in the Legislature, now assembled, hereby extended to the Commissioners of Great Britain and of France, the Right Honorable Arthur Balfour, Monsieur Rene Viviani and Marshal Joseph Joffre, and be it

Further Resolved, That copies of these resolutions, properly inscribed and bearing the great seal of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, be dispatched to each of these distinguished guests of the nation and of the State.

Socialists Hold Great Demonstration in Sweden

London, May 2.—A Stockholm dispatch says the greatest Socialist demonstration ever seen in Scandinavia, was held throughout Sweden on May Day. The demonstration was brought to a conclusion, although the result had been anticipated with anxiety and nervousness.

Great crowds assembled in the streets of Stockholm, carrying banners with inscriptions demanding more food and better conditions of life. Hundreds of children with peace banners participated and order was maintained by special police appointed by the workers.

The parade was headed by Hjalmar Branting, the Swedish Socialist leader, Pieter Troolstra, head of the Socialist International Bureau, and Camille Huysman, secretary of the International Bureau. The procession passed along the main streets, the enormous crowd singing the Marsellaise and the International. A mass meeting was held outside the city, where the leading Socialists made speeches, stating the demands of the working classes.

Up to Allies

The amount of tonnage that would be required for transport is usually put at about twenty tons per man in a fully equipped force. For the regular American unit of 24,000 men, nearly half a million tons therefore would be necessary, or ships about equal to the seized German tonnage in American waters. It remains for the allies to figure out if they can afford to divert that amount of shipping.

Little doubt exists that the French will gladly put up with any sacrifice necessary to have American troops in France, as the great plea of their mission has been for troops with the American flag. They have pointed out that this is needed to convince the Germans beyond doubt that America's resources have been thrown into the battle.

French Are Eager

The British also are known to be anxious to have American troops in France as a final earnest of American participation, but there is reason to believe that they have taken a somewhat more detached view than the French. Overcome by the wholeheartedness of American co-operation in the war, they believe that the one essential is to marshal the common resources to the greatest advantage. With their responsibility for tonnage, their decision about the advisability of sending an expeditionary force is uncertain.
