Another remarkable feature of the construction is that the work was done during the coldest part of the winter. The work was started about January 1 and is just being completed. These modern trestles replace two wooden ones twelve feet in height and are located at the blast furnaces.

Work on the erection of a temporary office building to be centrally located will be started shortly. The building will be fifty-five feet square. Offices of Superintendent Robert H. Irons, Chief Engineer G. L. Fink, three mill superintendents and clerks will be located in this building.

Installation of grates for burning river coal in all the boiler houses was recently completed. Additional gas producers are being installed at the universal mill gas house to increase the heating capacity.

Could Employ More Men Shipment of material and freight congestion does not threaten any tie-up in the big improvement program, officials say. Labor scarcity seems to be the biggest problem for the steel officials to solve.

Do Your Bit This plant can play a large part in this war, according to Superintendent Irons and he has placed bulletins through the plant asking each employee to "Do His Bit".

The President in his proclamation calls attention to the fact that while the navy is being placed on an effective war footing, and preparations are being made to train and equip a great army, there is still a greater task to be performed, namely, our farms, shipyards, mines, factories, mills and other industries must be made as efficient as possible.

After making a hurried survey of the wreck, Chief Nye, of the secret service accompanied by newspapermen, boarded the first engine and ran to Filson from where help was summoned.

Members of the commission remained about their cars, the observation car and the compartment car, until assistance came. They showed no excitement and the American members of the party also remained calm.

As soon as news of the accident reached Arcola people with automobiles went to the assistance of the distinguished party, offering their homes and machines for their use.

Recognition of the cool-headedness and courage of John Redmond, the engineer in charge of the first engine, and others of the crews of the two engines probably will be taken by the movement of patriotic citizens.

The Washington authorities have arranged for an entirely changed schedule and revised route. The special train will stop at Terre Haute in ten minutes to-day, at Indianapolis an hour and a quarter and at Columbus, Ohio, for the same length of time.

Philadelphia Gives Up Elaborate Ceremony For French War Mission Philadelphia, May 8. — Plans for the reception in this city to-day to the French mission, headed by Rene Viviani and Marshal Joffre, were cancelled upon receipt of the news of the accident of the special train bringing the distinguished visitors from the west.
