"America in this war is only following a dream."-Berlin exchange.

A dream that leads out endless years through the sweep of an unknown

That the way leads forth through the crimson rain to the top of the frown-

But the land and sky and the seas beneath are red as the wrath of hell, From the blood and flame that have stained all life with a crimson world at bay, But he shall hold to the road's far end, whatever the bitter spell, Till life and peace and the things worth while again have the right of way.

The Player's Future

Where death is the fairest fate to know when it comes in a gallant fight. We shall hear the voice of the night that calls for rest for the weary feet; And Love will come with a summer rose and eyes of the rain-wet blue, Of violets deep in the fields of May, and a song that is ever sweet From lips that plead that we stay our course till the spell of the spring is through.

So we shall follow as brave a dream as ever a dreamer knew;
