GUINEA RAISING FOR PROFIT; METHODS FOR BEGINNERS

Guinea raising is responsible for its hitherto limited list of friends. These peculiarities of its disposition account particularly for the general habit of allowing guineas to breed themselves in no other fowl does the instinct of distrust seem so much a part of cell and fiber as in this timorousness there is both in the profit and interest in raising this fowl.

PECULIARITIES OF THE GUINEA'S TEMPERAMENT MAKE REARING DIFFICULT

The male selects his mate and clings to her faithfully. While she attends to the duties of maternity he hovers near, ready to shrill an alarm at sign of danger. When the brood appears he shares equal responsibility for food shelter and protection. If misfortune overtakes the hen, he assumes her duties.

75 years ago everyone wore homespun and, likewise, everyone used hand-mixed paint. To-day, when machine-spun cloth is so much better and cheaper, no one would think of wearing homespun. Many people are still using hand-mixed paint, however, because they do not know that
