instification for refusal to permit the people of the several communities now suffering from all sorts of hodge-podge legislation to adopt such measures of relief as are possible save for the restriction of the fundamental law. For instance, Harrisburg is tied hand and foot by a code which binds together all the cities of the State save three or four, and while this city has endeavored to relieve itself of the burden which rests alike upon all it is helpless under the present classification. Certainly there can be no logical opposition to a measure which would give each city the right to adopt its own charter under reasonable constitutional restrictions.

Senator Beidleman is conversant with the difficulties which confront our own municipality and will be supported to a man in his effort to increase the measure of home rule so that Harrisburg, if it so desires, can adopt a charter for its own guidance. But in our boyhood, how we hated it. Many's the time we would have stood ready to swap for an hour in that kitchen bathtub an eternity in brimstone fire. Nor were its tortures entirely imaginary. After the days when mother shamelessly which was abandoned chiefly bestripped us down to the buff and strubbed our ears almost off right in the cause no one wanted to sponsor it. scrubbed our ears almost off right in front of anybody who happened to be present, up to the time when we until June 4 and some were even in ourselves did the scrubbing—a little less vigorously, to be sure—behind closely drawn blinds and doors locked against all intruders, that old kitchen was invariably either too hot or too cold; it was always a case members appeared to favor the plar of perspiration or the shivers.

WANTED—HOME RULE

With the actual work of the Legislature almost completed it is only reasonable to hope that Senator Beidleman's joint resolution for constitutional changes which will give the municipalities of Pennsylvania a larger measure of home rule may come out of committee and be given a fair chance on the floor.

Reservoir Park's "ever-blooming flower garden," one of the sights of the people's park at any time when Jack Frost is not cutting up his capers or when King Winter has not the slopes in his grip, is well worth a walk or a ride these days. It is filled with the flowers that come in the spring, gladdening hearts with their color and adding to the joy with which we greet the return of nilder days. Just now the garden is bright with flags and other blossoms of the early variety and the array of colors is bewlidering. The cultivation of the flag has been almost as extensive as of the gladiolus and some interesting results have been attained by crossing, some of which are to be seen at the Reservoir. Not only have the flowers bloomed in a way that makes one forget that the season is backward, but the trees are unsually beautiful. The horse chestnuts have been very pretty, the catalpas have attracted much attention and the empress tree is a sight. The garden and the flowering trees of the park are not as well known as they should be and the people who visit the park have a treat in store.

Representative Samuel A. Whitaker of Chester county, is one of the few commanders of National Guard units in the National Guard who has his command at war strength. Mr. Whitaker is captain of Battery C, First Artillery, Phoenixville, the oldest battery in the National Guard and one of the best in the organized militia of the country. For months this battery has been conducting a school for artillerymen and has been instructing men who were not members of the company so that when it was ordered above peace strength it could draw upon its reserve. Hence, like the Philadelphia First City Troop of Cavalry, it has always had men on a waiting list. When the order to recruit to war strength came Captain Whitaker was told by Adjutant General Stewart, he should secure his men. He drew an envelope from his pocket and said: "Here they are." He had the whole 190 required on the rolls and scores more qualified by physical condition and training to enter the service. As an example of preparedness Battery C ranks pretty high.

Dr. Nathan C. Schaeffer, the veteran educator who is a national figure, has served under six governors as head of the educational department. He will receive his seventh commission this week. Dr. Schaeffer, who comes from Berks county and has a string of letters after his name, was first commissioned in 1893 and commissioned again in 1897, 1901, 1905, 1909 and 1913. Now 1917 comes along. His collection of State parchments is impressive and his closest rival is Adjutant General Stewart who entered jutant General Stewart who State service in 1895 and is still blooming strong.

State service in 1895 and is still blooming strong.

Members of the State Grange, who were opposed in many instances to the war, have turned in behind the national government with enthusiasm. A number of the most influential Grangers who were here this week attending meetings of their legislative committees, said that their people were doing all they could to increase their food production and that some farmers had responded to the call for more food by putting under cultivation more acreage than ever before and some faced hard work through the lack of farm labor which would require them to handle all of the chores themselves. It is predicted that the State will have some great crops barring only unfavorable weather conditions and pests.

Mice are again commencing to make trouble about the Capitol. For a while they had the mice banished and roaches were the cause of much tribulation, necessitating taking of desks apart and liberal dosing of rooms with powders and preparations to make the bugs depart or die. Now the mice have come back and they have invaded no less a place than the Governor's department. They have been dancing square dances on the floor of Executive Clerk Deininger's office and playing tag beneath the desk of Private Secretary Ball.

The Big-Q Society of which Colonel Charles E. Covert is the leading spirit, will camp this year on the island of that name opposite Selinsgrove beginning Wednesday, July 18. Lucky is the man who is invited to the Big-Q camp, if he enjoys life in the open, jolly companionship and good things to eat. Those who go once never want to miss another season. Formality is thrown aside, costumes are cut down to the requirements of decency and the men become as nearly boys again as it is possible for grown men to do. Indeed there are those who have been entertained by Colonel Covert who believe that the campers could give a troop of Boy Scouts many pointers in the line of having a good time outdoors.

"Five Ring" Convention

Unlike any convention ever held in Pittsburgh, there will be "five rings" going full blast simultaneously, to use a seasonal term, when the 44th annual National Conference of Charlites and Correction opens here, June 6, with 3,500 social specialists from all parts of the country in attendance for a week of papers on social progress in America. Headquarters will be in the William Penn Hotel. This is the first time in the history of conventions in that city that it has been found necessary to divide the days' work into five distinct at-the-same-time sections to cover the field of discussion, with night meetings seven days in the week and a special program "Conference Sunday," June 10.
