COURT DECIDES "HOG ZONE" CASE

In Test Suits Brought at Carlisle Judge Gillan Sustains Health Board

Carlisle, Pa., June 11.—That Carlisle's "hog zone" ordinance was legal has been decided by Judge W. Rush Gillon of Chambersburg, who specially presided in hearings of test cases brought over the trouble. Judge Gillan holds in his opinion that the Legislature in creating local boards of health made them with a view of properly safeguarding the public interests and declares that they are a part of the legislative branch of government. It is further stated that the borough council cannot alter or change a rule of the board of health without the concurrence of the latter body.

The trouble here dates some years back, when the board of health drafted as part of their rules a provision that hogs could not be kept in a certain zone in the central part of the town. Hotel owners and others objected and the case was taken into the courts. In the meantime the borough council repealed the section of the rules which governed the zone. This they were without power to do, the Franklin county jurist finds.
