Many Little Known Facts About the Flag

The largest American flag in the world is suspended from the top of the Post Office Department Building, in Washington. It drops 300 feet in the inner court.

During the Revolution the flag had thirteen stars; in the War of 1812, fifteen; in the Mexican War, twenty-nine; in the Civil War, thirty-five; in the Spanish-Amer-ican War, forty-five, and in the present war, forty-eight. The famous flag which flew over Fort Sumter in April, 1861, the firing on which was the be-ginning of hostilities between the

The first American flag introduced the stripes of the present flag, but retained the crosses of St. Andrew and St. George on a blue ground in the corner, implying the surviving acknowledgment of the royal power with the birth of a new nation.

The American flag means more, even in its colors, than some comprehend. The red was chosen to denote defiance and daring, the white purity of purpose and the blue eternal vigilance, perseverance in the right and justice to all who should acknowledge fealty to the flag.

So many styles and forms of the stars and stripes flag were in existence in 1837 that certain foreign governments found it nec-essary to make inquiry of this Government just what the official flag was, resulting in 1852 of a careful study of the subject by Schuyler Hamilton.

The American flag is among the oldest of national flags, being older than the present British union jack, the French tricolor and the flag of Spain, and many years olders the flag of Spain, and many years olders the flags of Spain.

It is only five years since the United States flag was definitely standardized. During President Taft's administration representatives of the various government departments conferred on proportions and other details of the national flag, resulting in an executive order, dated October 29, 1912, which tended to standardize the Stars and Stripes.

the Second cavalry who accompanied General Pershing. A large American flag waved over the general's hotel and everywhere the French and American colors were intertwined.

Views War Relics
One of the first events on to-day's crowded program was a visit this morning to the Hotel Des Invalides, wherein is the historic monument containing Napoleon's body. On the Court of Honor General Pershing passed a great collection of war relicis, including shattered German airplanes, a large number of German and Austrian rapid-fire guns and various other engines of destruction. After a brief ceremony at the Invalides General Pershing made a formal call on Ambassador Sharp, and was then escorted with military honors to the place of the Elysee, to be presented to President Poincaire. At 12.30 o'clock the President and Madame Poincaire gave a state breakfast in honor of the American commander. Other guests were Premier Ribot, General Painleve, Marshal Joffre, Minister Viviani, Ambassador Sharp and other prominent figures in official and civil life.

At 3 p. m. M. Viviani addressed the Chamber of Deputies to recount the results of the French mission's visit to the United States, and it was expected Ambassador Sharp and probably General Pershing would be in the diplomatic gallery. To-night General Painleve will gie a dinner in honor of General Pershing would be in the diplomatic gallery. To-night General Painleve will gie a dinner in honor of General Pershing and Field Marshal Joffre were the first to appear. Behing them came a stream of American officers, each with a French officer as his host. The first shout of welcome became a continuous roar that seemed to shake the station to its foundations. The police hurriedly began to clear a lane down which a half dozen automobiles moved at a s

The Americans apparently had not imagined the heights to which Parislan enthusiasm could rise. Boys, men and girls and even some old women struggled to jump on the running-board of General Pershing's car to shake hands with him. The demonstration was the more significant because it came from a great outpouring of people who for the time being seemed almost to forget that war is in progress.

outpouring of people who for the time being seemed almost to forget that war is in progress.

It was not General Pershing alone who came in for unprecedented ovations, but every American caught sight of by the people was almost buried with flowers. Crowds shouted themselves hoarse with cheers for America. From every housetop all along the route, from every window, from every elevation and from the thousands upon thousands who choked every thoroughfare in the vicinity of the lane of march there was hurled a welcome that no American in Paris will ever forget.

Thousands Block Traffic General Pershing was expected to arrive from Boulogne at 5 o'clock, but his special train did not reach Paris until 6.30. This gave opportunity for thousands who work until 6 o'clock to mass themselves along the route, until the congestion became so great that transportation was tied up. General Pershing's features were not familiar to the people, but "Papa" Joffre's cap caught the eye of the people and revealed the identity of the soldier in khaki at his side.

At the station General Pershing was met by a group of French officials, including Minister Viviani, Marshal Joffre and Generals Foch, Painleve and Peltier, and by a group of Americans, headed by Ambassador Sharp. At one end of the station was an improvised throne with red tapestries, such as is erected when royalty is visiting the city, which had been put up for the occasion. Before leaving the station the party assembled at this point. Speeches of welcome were delivered by prominent Frenchmen.
