Pauline Frederick, in "Sleeping Fires," will have its final showing at the Regent to-day. In this picture Miss Frederick has a role, that, while it is entirely different from anything she has ever appeared in, will remind one of the part she took in "The Woman in the Case."

The attraction for to-morrow only is a return showing of Ibsen's immortal "Peer Gynt." Peer, upon a real story, is a real character, and his actual environment, make this production the nearest thing to a stage success.

AMERICAN SHIP FATALLY RAMS GERMAN U-BOAT

One of Two Sea Pirates Meets Fate Before Yankee Seamanship. An Atlantic Port, June 14.—The story of how one of Germany's latest and largest submarines laid a victim to Yankee seamanship, was told when the American Line steamship Kroonland, that did the trick, arrived here.

On her voyage to the other side, from which she has just returned, the vessel was attacked at the same moment by two U-boats acting in concert from port and starboard.

While the navy gunners chafed beside their six-inch guns, all kept up a launch a decisive shell whenever the angle of distance might permit, the skipper stationed himself beside the quartermaster at the wheel and kept him reversing the helm at intervals so that the liner sailed like a yacht as she zigzagged between the two assassins of the sea.

It was too late for the German to get out of the way. The American ship swept over the frail submarine with a shock felt by all on board, and it was seen no more. One blade of the liner's propeller was snapped off as she sank the U-boat.

As the sunken U-boat was seen to be a German submarine, its periscope disappeared a few moments later. The liner did not pause to investigate, but continued a zigzag course at full speed for the rest of her run to England.

London, June 14.—The weekly shipping report issued by the Admiralty states that twenty-two British merchantmen of more than 1,600 tons were sunk. Ten merchantmen of less than that tonnage also were sunk, together with six fishing vessels.
