THE VICTORY THAT LASTS

The International Sunday School Lesson For June 17 Is "The Risen Lord"-John 20:1-18.

A familiar enough scene; especially now women weep because they have borne most of the world's suffering. The vicaricusness of womanhood is at once a great sorrow and a great glory. Tears are oftenest caused by death; there are worse griefs than this one, but over it we weep most. The mystery, the slience, the separation of death stirs the heart's deep foun. death stirs the heart's deep fountains.

This woman had best cause for weeping. In the grave beside which she stood had been buried the body of her Healer, her Teacher, her best Friend; the personal loss was beyond measure. And in the tomb also had been laid away the hopes of a band of eager disciples, hopes for the redemption of Israel and for a new reign of righteousness for all the world. On Jesus these friends had builded everything: with him in the grave the house of their hopes had toppled about their bowed heads. Now at dawn Mary and the women had come—the alertness of love is woman's—bearing spices for their dead; the cold body of their Lord was all that they expected, but God is always doing better than His children expect or think. Mary and the women entered upon a new estate that day which has been bequeathed to all womanhood since. As Mrs. Browning sang:

The Message of Mary
The first preacher of the full gospel was a woman. To Mary it was given to utter the word that unfolded the complete significance of the acts and teachings of Jesus. What a revolution in feeling and outlook the news must have created in the minds of the disciples! All was clear now; the sayings that they formerly had been unable to comprehend shone with divine meaning. Jesus had risen, even as He had said. He had done exceedingly abundantly above all that they could ask or think. Not defeat, but victory was their program.

Now the infant Church had a message of the first church had a message defeat, but victory was their program.

Now the infant Church had a message for the world, the very message of hope and life which is most needed. The last great enemy who had blanched the cheek of the bravest, had been conquered. Men need no longer be prisoners to dread and fear. A new attitude toward life and death had been created. Thenceforward the disciples would go forth, as thousands since have done, facing every martyrdom songfully. The world's wonderment, "Behold, how these Christians die!" would be a new gateway to the kingdom. The resurrection hope is the capstone of the edifice of Christian truth. "Because I live, ye shall live also;" this is the word which the Church is now to cry aloud above the din of the world's battlefields as the comfort or all the bereaved; and as the sure stay of all who face death.

sure stay of all who face death.

Our Own Day's Chief Question

Every day's newspaper contains special mention of those who hav
solved the problem of immortality
and of those who are deeply, imme diately and supremely concerned it.

They will be found in the death and of those who are deeply, immediately and supremely concerned in it. They will be found in the death notice column, and the first group are those who have died, and the second group are the families and near friends of the dead.

No question is more ancient, more insistent, or more profound and important than this one, "If a man die, shall he live again?" To some degree it is certain at some time or other to engage the thought of every mature mind. With the daily dispatches from abroad fairly reeking with news of bloody deaths by the myriads, the problem is one that thrusts itself inexorably into the censideration of even the frivolous minded and the heedless.

Every poet, every philosopher, has speculated upon the theme. The human mind has always experienced "intimations of immortality." The conviction that this supreme flower and fruit of the universe, the human soul, was not born to fall and perish utterly and that this earthly life is by many signs, only the preparation for some higher form of existence, lies deep down in the thinking of every normal person. Addison put the thought into a few lines:

"It must be so—Plato, thou reason—

"It must be so—Plato, thou reasonest well!
Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality?
Or whence this secret drea and inward horror of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul
Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
Tis the divinity that stirs within us:

"Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.
Eternity; thou pleasing, dreadful thought!"

Creed's Effect Upon Character
The chrism of earth's friendships is the hope of the resurrection, which sacredly anoints them for two worlds. All our highest conceptions of love are bound up with the expectation of a life beyond the grave.
Grounded in the resurrection teaching is the Christian's hope of Christly character and of future glory. "If ye then be risen together with Christ, seek those things which are above." "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-

The Good Shepherd calls His sheep by name, and each is, as Mary was, a beloved personal, present relationship with the liking Christ, to whom a long line of martyrs and saints bear testimony, saying with St. Paul, "I know whom I have believed." That relations he believed." That relations are extended in an address before the had new work. Mary, too, had an immediate mission; she could not sit and adore, for the brethren awaited the glorious news, "He is sit."

Among the sacred things to be reverenced we may count the ideals and convictions of our hearts. Sometimes beautiful aspirations are scoffed at by a rude world, yet in truth they are more worthy of respect than the opinions of the world itself. To our own loftlest conceptions of life and duty we should pay utmost deference; they are divine promptings, and, followed, will lead us into a royal heritage. Countless, lives have come to disaster because they falled properly to retard their own best beliefs and revelations.

Reverence for the right promotes righteousness.
