"That was my knockout, Bly," he said with a quietness that was almost overdone. "My time has suddenly been shortened to hours—perhaps to minutes. Get a car as quickly as you can and go to Judge Warner's house. I have an appointment with him at nine o'clock. Tell him I'll keep it if I can, but that he needn't wait for me if I am not there on the minute."

CHAPTER XXI.
The Colonel's "Deh."
Though it was only eight o'clock Smith sent his card to Miss Richlander's rooms at once and then he himself lifted to the mezzanine floor to wait for her. She came in a few minutes, a strikingly beautiful figure of a woman in the freshness of her morning gown, red-lipped, bright-eyed, and serenely conscious of her own repleant gifts of face and figure. Smith went quickly to meet her and drew her aside into the music parlor. Already the need for caution was beginning to make itself felt.
"I have come," he said briefly.
"You got my note?" she asked.
"A few minutes ago—just as I was leaving the breakfast table."
"You will leave here at once—while the way is still open."
He shook his head. "I can't do that; in common justice to the men who have trusted me, and who are now needing me more than ever, I must stay through this one day, and possibly another."
"Mr. Kinzie will not be likely to lose any time," she prefaced thoughtfully. "He has probably telegraphed to Lawrenceville before this." Then, with a glance over her shoulder to make sure that there were no eavesdroppers: "But not one of these Brewsterites can identify you as John Montague Smith, of Lawrenceville—the man who is wanted by Sheriff Macauley. My father, in his letter, after telling me that he will be detained in the mountains several days longer, refers to Mr. Kinzie's request and suggests—"
The fugitive was smiling grimly. "He suggests that you might help Mr. Kinzie out."
"Not quite that," she rejoined. "He merely suggests that I am to be prudent, and—to quote him exactly—"not get mixed up in the affair in any way so that it would make talk."

"I see," said Smith. And then: "You have a disagreeable duty ahead of you, and I'd relieve you of the necessity by running away, if I could. But that is impossible, as I have explained."
She was silent for a moment; then she said: "When I told you a few days ago that you were going to need my help, Montague, I didn't foresee anything like this. I shall breakfast with the Stantons in a few minutes; and after nine o'clock—out of the way until I can get word to you; just so they won't be able to bring us face to face with each other."
Smith saw what she meant; saw also that her wretched fate was dragging him. It was the newest of all the reincarnations, the one which had begun with Jibbey's silent nod and the night before, prompted him to say:
"If they should ask you about me, you must tell them the truth, Verda."
Her smile was mildly scornful. "Is that what the plain-faced little ranch person would do?" she asked.
"I don't know; yes, I guess it is."
"Doesn't she care any more for you than that?"
Smith did not reply. He was standing where he could watch the comings and goings of the elevators. Time was precious and he was chafing at the delay, but Miss Richlander was not yet ready to let him go.
"Tell me honestly, Montague," she said; "is it anything more than a case of propinquity with this Baldwin?"
"It isn't anything," he returned

All's Well That Ends Well

The Girl Who Learned That Hard Work Is the Very Best Health Diet.

By Jane McLean
Tragedies sometimes appear funny to some people. What one girl will call a tragedy another will call a joke, it all depends upon the point of view. Edith had a tragedy in her life, but other people looked upon it as a thing for laughter. In short Edith was fat; it was her abomination, and yet, although it worried her almost to distraction when she thought about it, she simply did not have the courage to diet.
"Besides," she reasoned when anyone else suggested that she try denying herself for a while, "I have known of loads of people who dieted, and nothing at all happened. Which fact is indeed true, but it certainly does not settle all cases. Miss Baldwin refused, rather rudely, I thought, to tell her father where you had gone."
Edith was not one of the girls who worked. Her time was entirely her own. She was one of that large class of girls who, brought up to have plenty, would not know what to do if deprived of anything. Edith rose when she liked and went to bed when she liked. She had attractive clothes and a very nice home. Her pleasures were simple enough; they consisted of matinee with other girls, plenty of spending money, tea in the afternoon, an occasional caller, an occasional dance; in short, nothing at all to especially differentiate one day from another.
Edith did not know that she was bored, because if she had stopped to reason at all, she would have thought it absurd to admit even to herself that her life lacked anything. The only thing that did worry her was the fact that she was fat. Her mirror did not lie, and although her friends laughingly called her only plump, Edith knew that her dancing frocks did not do her justice, and that her waist was too thick, and she envied as she did nothing else the lissome slimmness of her friends.
But one cannot have everything, it seems, and Edith did love tea with plenty of cream and lettuce and mayonnaise sandwiches, and candy. If she had not been brought up suddenly with a shock things might have gone on and on and Edith might have grown stouter and stouter until the end of the tale, but her dancing frocks did not do her justice, and that her waist was too thick, and she envied as she did nothing else the lissome slimmness of her friends.

Dr. Beck, The Well Known Eye Specialist and Doctor Judkins, The Medical Author, Publish Astonishing Report on Wonderful Remedy To Strengthen Eyesight
Say It Strengthens Eyesight 50% in One Week's Time in Many Instances

DR. BECK
A Free Prescription You Can Have Filled and Use at Home

New York.—Dr. Beck, a New York State eye specialist, and Dr. Judkins, a Massachusetts physician, were asked to make a thorough test of the popular eye remedy, Bon Opto. Their reports were most interesting. Here they are:
Dr. Beck reports, "When my attention was first called to the wonderful eye remedy, Bon Opto, I was inclined to be skeptical. I make it a rule to test every new treatment which is brought to my attention. Having specialized in eye work for the past twenty years, I believe I am qualified to express an intelligent opinion on remedies applicable to the eyes. Since Bon Opto has created such a sensation throughout the United States and Canada, I welcomed the opportunity to test it. I began to use it in my practice a little over a year ago and developed the eye muscles, which reaches conditions not possible through other means. I advise every thoughtful physician to study Bon Opto principles. That it can be used at home, especially, that the Bon Opto method opens the door for the cure of many eye troubles, which heretofore been impossible to cope with. The treatment is so simple in its application that it can be used at home by anyone of average intelligence. In my own practice I have seen it strengthen the eyesight more than 50 per cent. in one week's time. I have also used it with surprising effect in cases of work strained eyes, pink eye, inflamed lids, catarrhal conjunctivitis, smarting, painful, aching, itching eyes, eyes weakened from colds, smoke, sun, dust and wind, watery eyes, blurred vision, and in fact many other conditions too numerous to describe in this report. A new and startling case has just come under my observation, which I will describe in this report. Before permitting her to be operated on, the young girl's father decided to use Bon Opto. In less than three days a marked improvement was noticed. At the end of six weeks the eye was saved. Just this case is that of a lady ninety-three years old, whose eyes were withered and extreme inflammation of the lids and the conjunctiva was almost raw. After two weeks' use of Bon Opto the lids were absolutely normal and her eyes are as bright as many a girl of sixteen."

Dr. Judkins, Massachusetts physician, formerly Chief of Clinics in the Union General Hospital, Boston, Mass., and formerly House Surgeon at the New England Eye and Ear Infirmary of Portland, Me., a medical author for many years, reports:
"I have found oculists too prone to operate and physicians too willing to prescribe glasses while neglecting the simple formulas which form the basis of that wonderful home treatment for eye troubles, Bon Opto. This, in my opinion, is a remarkable remedy for curing and preventing many eye disorders. Its success in developing and strengthening the eyesight will soon make eye glasses old-fashioned and the form of eye baths which the Bon Opto method provides, will make its use as common as that of the tooth brush. I am thoroughly convinced from my experience with Bon Opto that it will strengthen the eyesight at least 50 per cent. in one week's time. I have used it on patients whose eyes were strained through overwork or mist glasses. It is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family." Bon Opto referred to above, is not a patent medicine or a secret remedy. It is an ethical preparation, the formula being printed on the package. The manufacturer guarantees it to strengthen eyesight in many instances or refund the money. It is dispensed by all good druggists in this city, including E. C. Kennedy, Croll Keller and J. Nelson Clark.
